INTRODUCTION.

---

EN FOLKEFIENDE, SKUESPIL I FEM AKTER, was published in Copenhagen on November 28th, 1882. It was begun in Rome in the early part of that year, and finished at Gossensass in the Tyrol. Less than a year had elapsed since the publication of Ghosts in 1881; whereas from Pillars of Society (1877) down to John Gabriel Borkman (1896) two years was always, except in this single instance, the interval between the poet's works. There can be no doubt that it was the reception of Ghosts, its (temporary) exclusion from the leading theatres of Scandinavia, and the storm of obloquy with which it was greeted, that stirred Ibsen to this unwonted rapidity of production. Soon after the appearance of Ghosts, he wrote to Dr. George Brandes (January 3rd, 1882):—

“Bjornson says, ‘The majority is always right’; and as a practical politician he is bound, I suppose, to say so. I, on the contrary, of necessity say, ‘The minority is always right.’ Naturally I am not thinking of that minority of stagnationists who are left behind by the great middle party, which with us is called Liberal; I mean that minority which leads the van, and pushes on to points which the majority has not yet reached.”

Again, about the same time, and to the same correspondent, he wrote:—

"When I think how slow and heavy and dull the general intelligence is at home, when I notice the low standard by which everything is judged, a deep despondency comes over me, and it often seems to me that I might just as well end my literary activity at once. They really do not need poetry at home; they get along so well with the Parliamentary News and the Lutheran Weekly. And then they have their party papers. I have not the gifts that go to make a good citizen, nor yet the gift of orthodoxy; and what I possess no gift for, I keep out of. Liberty is the first and highest condition for me. At home they do not trouble much about liberty, but only about liberties, a few more or a few less, according to the standpoint of their party. I feel, too, most painfully affected by the crudity, the plebeian element, in all our public discussion. The very praiseworthy attempt to make of our people a democratic community has inadvertently gone a good way towards making us a plebeian community. Distinction of soul seems to be on the decline at home."<sup>1</sup>

It is easy to discern in these utterances the frame of mind which gave birth to An Enemy of the People. They anticipate, not only in spirit but even in words, some of Dr. Stockmann's ebullitions. It is curious and characteristic, however, that this mood of exceptional, and to some extent personal, bitterness, should have found for its mouthpiece the most genial and amiable of all Ibsen's characters. The psychological process which led to this result is not very hard to divine. As soon as the poet found himself uttering with some directness his own personal feelings, the ironical "brownie" in his brain (to use Stevenson's illustration) was at once on the alert: he began laughing at himself and exaggerating the simplicity which had prevented him from foreseeing the rage with which his indictment of society would be received: and thus the simple-minded, large-hearted, child-like Thomas Stockmann sprang into being. The same impulse towards self-ridicule found gloomier expression, two years afterwards, in The Wild Duck; while in his next play, Resmersholm, the poet returned to, and developed at length, his conception of the plebeianising influence of democratic partisanship, and his longing for the ennoblement of political democracy by an infusion of spiritual aristocracy.

All the leading theatres of Scandinavia mounted An Enemy of the People without delay. It was first performed at the Christiania Theatre on January 13th, 1883, with Reimers as Stockmann and Klausen as Morten Køl. Thus the frontispiece to this volume represents the original performers of these parts. The play was acted 27 times in the course of the season. In Bergen it was produced on January 24th, 1883; in Gothenburg a few days later; at the Dramatiska Teater, Stockholm, on March 3rd; and at the Royal Theatre, Copenhagen, on March 4th, with Emil Poulsen as Stockmann and Olaf Poulsen as Morten Køl, while Schram resumed the character of Aslaksen, which he had created so brilliantly in The League of Youth. The most memorable Scandinavian production, however, was indubitably that which took place on September 2nd, 1899, on the occasion of the opening of the new National Theatre at Christiania. The actual opening night, the first of the three "festival performances," was devoted to Holberg, the great Norwegian who, in the first half of the eighteenth century, founded the Danish theatre. The Ibsen evening came second, and the Björnson evening third; Björnson being represented by a splendid production of his romantic drama Sigurd Jorsalfar, Ibsen by a revival of En Folkefjende with the following cast :

Dr. Stockmann	-	-	-	-	FREDRIK GARMANN

I extract from a letter contributed by me to the Daily Chronicle (September 8th, 1899), the following description of the "Ibsen Evening":—

"After a 'National Festival March,' by Johan Selmer, Director Bjørn Bjørnson came forward to deliver a prologue by Nils Collett Vogt, perhaps the most noteworthy lyric poet of the younger generation. This is the second prologue Vogt has written for an Ibsen festival. The first, printed in his Music and Spring, was masterly. This second effort proved to be more rhetorical, perhaps even conventional; but as Bjørnson delivered it in his ringing voice and with contagious enthusiasm, the effect was irresistible. I give a rough translation of one of its strophes :

'The people, doomed in mists of doubt to grope,
 Found for its powers no future and no scope,
 Till o'er the horizon loomed a fiery form,
 A lurid vision, framed in cloud and storm :
 Thus it saw HENRIK IBSEN'S genius rise !
 Prophet, and judge, and poet world-renowned,
 Battling against the trolls of Compromise,
 Half-measures cowardly and skulking Laes,

And gazing towards the Future, proude-crowned,
With strangely penetrating, dream-deep eyes.'

In answer to the applause at the close, Björnson came down to the footlights, and, waving his hand towards the poet's box, cried, 'Long live Henrik Ibsen!' Instantly the whole audience sprang to its feet, and, amid a tempest of applause and cheers, the poet, hitherto invisible, came to the front of his box and bowed repeatedly. When he retired, the storm died down and we resumed our seats; but after a moment of silence a common impulse seemed to run through the whole house, every one sprang up again, and once more the poet was summoned forth by three times three cheers, followed by prolonged applause and waving of handkerchiefs. Seldom, assuredly, has any poet been more tumultuously acclaimed.

"What struck me most forcibly in the play was the total absence of any date-mark upon it. Though seventeen years old, it might quite well have been written yesterday. Every line of it went straight home, for every line of it bears upon the essential problems of democracy. Not until we have achieved that identification of democracy with aristocracy, which is the poet's far-off dream, will the satire of En Folkefiende become obsolete. And yet one could not but reflect that this intensely vital and stirring comedy, which gave the audience thrill after thrill of intellectual pleasure, must, after all, rank among Ibsen's minor works, inasmuch as it appeals to the intellect alone, and contains little or none of that poetry which is the supreme quality of his masterpieces. En Folkefiende, a play of many characters, rapid external movement, and wide popular appeal, was happily chosen for the present occasion. It interested and amused us intensely, as the applause and laughter throughout, and the two or three recalls at the end of every act, unmistakably testified. But it was not the author of En Folkefiende whom the house rose to acclaim, again and yet again, before and after the play—it was the poet of Brand and Peter Gynt, of Rosmersholm, The Master Builder, and John Gabriel Borkman. The enthusiasm at the close of the evening was even greater than at the opening, the cheering louder and more prolonged. The one person in the theatre who remained entirely calm and collected was Henrik Ibsen. I met him in the corridor as we were going out, and stammered my congratulations. 'Don't you think it went very well?' was all he said."

It is remarkable that this play, now so popular in Germany, took four years to find its way to the German stage. Ein Volksfeind was first produced at the Ostend Theater, Berlin, at a special charity performance, on March 5th, 1887, but was immediately placed in the regular bill and repeated about 20 times. In the following year (March 1888) it was produced at the Court Theatre, Meiningen, where the fourth act was naturally found to offer a superb opportunity for the Meiningen methods of stage-management. From this time forward, not a season has passed without numerous productions and revivals at the leading theatres of the German-speaking countries. In 1888 it was acted at the Municipal Theatres of Königsberg, Hamburg, Altona, and Bern; in 1890 at the Lessing Theatre, Berlin, at the Municipal Theatre, Frankfurt, and at the Hofburg Theater in Vienna (October 24th), where the great actors Sonnenthal and Lewinsky played Stockmann and the Burgomaster respectively, and Frau Schratt Petra; in 1891 at the Municipal Theatre, Mainz; in 1894 at the Neues Theater, Berlin; in 1896 at the Royal Theatre, Berlin, and the Court Theatre, Karlsruhe; in 1897 at the Court Theatre, Munich, the Schiller Theatre, Berlin, and the Raimundtheater, Vienna; in 1898 at the Municipal Theatre, Cologne, and the Deutsches Theater, Prague. This list (taken from Halvorsen's "Bibliographic Notes" to the collected edition of Ibsen's works) is very incomplete, even as an enumeration of first performances. I myself saw a performance of Ein Volksfeind at the Residenztheater, Munich (the smaller Court Theatre), on August 23rd, 1890, seven years before the earliest Munich performance mentioned by Halvorsen; and it was not then new to the Munich stage. But even from this imperfect enumeration it is evident that the play has found a curiously ready acceptance, not only at Municipal Theatres, but at the Court Theatres of Germany and Austria. It was the first of Ibsen's modern plays to gain admission to the sacred precincts of the Vienna Court Theatre, and it is, so far as I am aware, the only work by which he is represented in the repertory of the Court Theatre of Berlin. Can it be that Stockmann's denunciation of the "compact liberal majority" finds special favour in "allerhöchst" quarters?

Be this as it may, the play has indubitably taken a strong hold upon the German public, and gained ground year by year. For example, the Berlin National-Zeitung, which criticised it when it was first produced at the Ostend Theater in very much the spirit which Mr. Billing might have adopted had he been sent to "do a notice" for the People's Messenger, has changed its tone entirely when Sonnenthal plays Stockmann at the Neues Theater seven years later, and now hails the worthy Doctor as a "Northern Coriolanus." As for its popularity, the following little incident is significant. I arrived at Vienna one Sunday morning in the autumn of 1898, and congratulated myself on seeing a performance of Ein Volksfeind advertised for that afternoon at the Raimundtheater. Arriving at the theatre just in time, as I thought, to see the curtain rise, I found that every seat was sold, and that not a corner was to be had for love or money. It is not every play that can fill a theatre, even in Vienna, on a brilliant September afternoon.

In London An Enemy of the People may claim the distinction of being the only play of Ibsen's which has found favour in the eyes of an actor-manager. It was acted at the Haymarket Theatre on the afternoon of Wednesday, June 14th, 1893, and repeated at three afternoon and three evening performances. The following is the play-bill of the first performance:

Backed by the prestige of a popular actor-manager, the production was naturally treated by the critics with unusual leniency. They even betrayed an amiable astonishment on finding themselves, for once, able more or less to understand a play of Ibsen's. In almost every notice there occurs a sentence to this effect: "We are not quite sure that the perfect intelligibility of Dr. Ibsen's play constitutes a merit in the eyes of the author's worshippers." For the rest, their notices are so much in one key throughout, that a very few specimens, culled from leading organs of opinion, will in this case suffice:—

"The piece is more interesting than attractive. It contains nothing picturesque, and is one of the few theatrical productions from which the playwright has been bold enough to exclude what may be called the love-motive. The characterisation is exceptionally good and unexaggerated, and the actions natural and convincing. In fact, so determined has the dramatist been that his play should be true to life that he has not excluded from it some dull moments."

"It is as an 'acting play' that we must appraise An Enemy of the People, now that it has pleased the Haymarket manager to bring it to a public hearing; and, viewing the work from this standpoint, we can have little hesitation in declaring Mr. Tee's thought a happy one, and his taste infinitely better than that of those who have been beforehand with him in 'opening up' the arid tract of the Scandinavian drama."

"Those who take an interest in Mr. Ibsen's career—their number has been repeatedly proved by demonstration to be extremely small in this country—are pleased to suppose that Dr. Stockmann in this play is intended to represent Mr. Ibsen himself. . . . It is absolutely impossible to be moved by the exhibition of this provincial squabble, and the characters by which it is carried on are, in truth, about as old as fiction itself. . . . It is understood that the disciples of Mr. Ibsen have no great opinion of the play, which has to them the dement of being at least comprehensible."

"Parochial politics, without the aid of any passion of a more romantic kind, are but poor material for the dramatist's purposes, and the introduction of a long scene in which the whole business of a parish meeting, with its platform squabbles, its resolutions and amendments, its excited speeches, and its frequent calls to order, are set forth with remarkable fidelity, would have been decidedly a perilous feature if the audience had not been composed in great measure of Ibsen enthusiasts. Five acts are clearly too much for matter of this kind. The play, to tell the truth, is, in spite of its cleverness, largely infected with dullness. The great redeeming feature was the excellence of the acting."<sup>1</sup>

"In An Enemy of the People we have an Ibsen play not conforming to the later traditions of the Master inasmuch as it is neither meaningless, obscure, nor nasty; although a concession is made to the prejudices of his admirers by the introduction of some intervals of considerable dullness. But, on the whole, the ability with which the story is set out leads us to wish that the dramatist had chosen some more attractive subject—rather than this turbulent storm in a suburban teapot."

The only provincial performance of the play which has come within my ken took place at the Gentlemen's Concert Hall, Manchester, on the evening of January 27th, 1894. It was organised by the Manchester branch of the Independent Theatre, and Dr. Stockmann was played by Mr. Louis Calvert. The Manchester Guardian wound up its notice of the play in these terms:—"It is possible to be dissatisfied with Ibsen himself, but what is certain is that he cannot but make every rational person dissatisfied with the stage as it is—with the mechanical melodrama devoid of any analysis of motive whatever, and with the 'well-made' farcical comedy adapted from the French."

In America, Ein Volksfeind seems to have been first acted at Amberg's Theatre, New York, on April 8th, 1892. No doubt there have been many other performances in German, but I have no record of them. It does not seem to have been acted in English except by Mr. Beerbohm Tree, who presented it at Abbey's Theatre, New York, at the Chicago Opera House, and possibly elsewhere, during his American tour of 1895.

In France the play has had a somewhat more eventful history than in England. It was first produced by "L'Œuvre" at the Bouffes du Nord on November 9th and 10th, 1893, with the following cast : --

Mme. Stockmann	-	-	-	Mme. R. DE PONTY
Pétra	-	-	-	Mlle. G. CAMÉE
Le docteur Stockmann	-	-	-	MM. LUGNÉ-POË
Le préfet Stockmann	-	-	-	RAVEY

Hovstad	-	-	-	R. LAGRANGE
Billing	-	-	-	DESMARETS
Aslaksen	-	-	-	DEPAS
Le capitaine Horster	-	-	-	CRAVERI

On the first night it was preceded by a lecture by M. Laurent Tailhade, which consisted not so much of an exposition of the play, as of a violent attack upon all the "leading men" in French literature and politics. Beside it, Dr. Stockmann's harangue in the fourth act seems moderate and almost mealy-mouthed. The following extracts are comparatively mild specimens of M. Tailhade's eloquence :--

"La Norvège, en effet, est de tous les États d'Europe celui qui vit le plus selon les règles abjectes de la démocratie. Ajoutez le protestantisme, le hideux protestantisme, cette machine d'inguérissable abrutissement, et vous comprendrez sans peine quelles douleurs peut endurer une personnalité fière dans ces petites républiques de pêcheurs et de paysans."

Ibsen, one fears, would scarcely recognise his native country in M. Tailhade's description; nor would he endorse the pure Nietzscheism of the moral which the lecturer drew from the play:—

"Quand la bienfaisante révolte aura brisé les anciens cadres, et réduit à néant les usurpations de la classe moyenne . . . les foules se courberont devant les individualités fortes, et salueront en elles la seule noblesse de l'avenir. Elles comprendront alors que l'homme supérieur ne saurait avoir envers elles que des droits et non des devoirs."

The audience listened, not without protest, to M. Tailhade's diatribe, until he thought fit to describe the recent Franco-Russian fêtes as an act of collective insanity. At this point a storm of indignation burst forth, which lasted without pause for a quarter of an hour, and was not allayed by an attempt at intervention on the part of M. Lugné-Poë. The lecture closed amid wild confusion, and altogether the preliminary scene in the auditorium was like a spirited rehearsal of the meeting at Captain Horster's.

M. Francisque Sarcey was perhaps none the more kindly disposed towards the play for having been characterised in M. Tailhade's lecture as "le mégathérium gigantesque de l'irréceptivité intellectuelle." This, at any rate, was what he found to say of it:—

"This seems to me one of the clearest, but at the same time one of the weakest of Ibsen's works. It is a collection of common-places such as, half a century ago, Mme. Sand and many others, in revolt against society, used to develop with greater amplitude and greater eloquence. These threadbare truisms, which come back to us with an exotic impress, are taken for audacious novelties by young people who seem to me to be better read in Norwegian literature than in that of their own country. . . . An Enemy of the People is a work of rare mediocrity; ah! if it were not by Ibsen! But it is by Ibsen; we must simply bow."

When the play was revived in December 1894, M. Saroy returned to the attack, in much the same terms.

Four years later, on the occasion of Ibsen's seventieth birthday, March 29th, 1898, Un Ennemi du Peuple was again presented in Paris, this time at the Renaissance. The announcement of the performance ran as follows:—

"Représentation de gala en honneur du soixante-dixième anniversaire d'Ibsen, organisée par la Revue blanche et le Mercur de France, sous le patronage de MM. Emmanuel Arène, Henry Bauer, Emile Faguet, Henry Fouquier, Catulle Mendès, critiques dramatiques, et avec le concours du théâtre de l'Œuvre."

"La figuration [that is to say, the crowd in the fourth act] sera composée de littérateurs et d'artistes peintres."

Again, on this occasion, the scene was a somewhat stormy one, the audience seizing upon several opportunities to make demonstrations with reference to Zola's recent intervention in the Dreyfus case. On October 29th, 1899, a performance of the play, again by the company of "L'Œuvre," was given at the Gymnase. As "ouvriers syndiqués," duly authenticated, were admitted at half price to all parts of the house, it is scarcely surprising to learn that the representation was now and then interrupted by cries of Vive l'anarchie!

A Dutch translation was performed at Rotterdam so early as February 1884, under the title of Een Vijand des Volks. An Italian translation, Un Nemico del Popolo, was acted by Novelli's company in Italy in 1895, and in Spain in 1896. On the other hand, an attempt by some Spanish anarchists to organise a performance was forbidden by the Government. It seems at first sight remarkable that a play which has found special favour at the Court Theatres in Germany should in France and Spain be seized upon by the anarchists as a weapon of propagandism. The explanation of the apparent inconsistency, however, is not very far to seek.

PLAY IN FIVE ACTS.

— •• —

ACT FIRST.

Evening. DR. STOCKMANN'S sitting-room; simply but neatly decorated and furnished. In the wall to the right are two doors, the further one leading to the hall, the nearer one to the Doctor's study. In the opposite wall, facing the hall door, a door leading to the other rooms of the house. Against the middle of this wall stands the stove; further forward a sofa, with a mirror above it, and in front of it an oval table with a cover. On the table a lighted lamp, with a shade. In the back wall an open door leading to the dining-room, in which is seen a supper-table, with a lamp on it.

[BILLING is seated at the supper-table, a napkin under his chin. MRS. STOCKMANN is standing by the table and placing before him a dish with a large joint of roast beef. The other seats round the table are empty; the table is in disorder, as after a meal.]

MRS. STOCKMANN.

If you come an hour late, Mr. Billing, you must put up with a cold supper.

BILLING.

[Eating.] It is excellent—really first rate.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

You know how Stockmann insists on regular meal-hours——

BILLING.

Oh, I don't mind at all. I almost think I enjoy my supper more when I can sit down to it like this, alone and undisturbed.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Oh well, if you enjoy it——— [Listening in the direction of the hall.] I believe this is Mr. Hovstad coming too.

BILLING.

Very likely.

[BURGOMASTER STOCKMANN enters, wearing an overcoat and an official gold-laced cap, and carrying a stick.]

BURGOMASTER.

Good evening, sister-in-law.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[Coming forward into the sitting-room.] Oh, good evening; is it you? It is good of you to look in.

BURGOMASTER.

I was just passing, and so——[Looks towards the dining room.] Ah, I see you have company.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[Rather embarrassed.] Oh no, not at all; it's the merest chance. [Hurriedly.] Won't you sit down and have a little supper?

BURGOMASTER.

I? No, thank you. Good gracious! hot meat in the evening! That wouldn't suit my digestion.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Oh, for once in a way——

BURGOMASTER.

No, no,—much obliged to you. I stick to tea and bread and butter. It's more wholesome in the long run—and rather more economical, too.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[Smiling.] You mustn't think Thomas and I are mere spendthrifts, either.

BURGOMASTER.

You are not, sister-in law; far be it from me to say that. [Pointing to the Doctor's study.] Is he not at home?

MRS. STOCKMANN.

No, he has gone for a little turn after supper—with the boys.

BURGOMASTER.

I wonder if that is a good thing to do? [Listening] There he is, no doubt.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

No, that is not he. [I knock] Come in!
[Hovstad enters from the hall.]

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Ah, it's Mr. Hovstad ----

HOVSTAD.

You must excuse me; I was detained at the printer's. Good evening, Burgomaster.

BURGOMASTER.

[Bowing rather stiffly.] Mr. Hovstad! You come on business, I presume?

HOVSTAD.

Partly. About an article for the paper.

BURGOMASTER.

So I supposed. I hear my brother is an extremely prolific contributor to the People's Messenger.

Hovstad.

Yes, when he wants to relieve his mind on one thing or another, he gives the Messenger the benefit.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[To Hovstad] But will you not——? [Points to the dining room.]

BURGOMASTER.

Well well, I am far from blaming him for writing for the class of readers he finds most in sympathy with him. And, personally, I have no reason to bear your paper any ill-will, Mr. Hovstad.

Hovstad.

No, I should think not.

BURGOMASTER.

One may say, on the whole, that a fine spirit of mutual tolerance prevails in our town - an excellent public spirit. And that is because we have a great common interest to hold us together—an interest in which all right-minded citizens are equally concerned —

Hovstad.

Yes—the Baths.

BURGOMASTER.

Just so. We have our magnificent new Baths. Mark my words! The whole life of the town will centre around the Baths, Mr. Hovstad. There can be no doubt of it!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

That is just what Thomas says.

BURGOMASTER.

How marvellously the place has developed, even in this couple of years! Money has come into circulation, and brought life and movement with it. Houses and ground-rents rise in value every day.

HOVSTAD.

And there are fewer people out of work.

BURGOMASTER.

That is true. There is a gratifying diminution in the burden imposed on the well-to-do classes by the poor-rates; and they will be still further lightened if only we have a really good summer this year—a rush of visitors—plenty of invalids, to give the Baths a reputation.

HOVSTAD.

I hear there is every prospect of that.

BURGOMASTER.

Things look most promising. Inquiries about apartments and so forth keep on pouring in.

Hovstad.

Then the Doctor's paper will come in very opportunely.

BURGOMASTER.

Has he been writing again?

Hovstad.

This is a thing he wrote in the winter; enlarging on the virtues of the Baths, and on the excellent sanitary conditions of the town. But at that time I held it over.

BURGOMASTER.

Ah - I suppose there was something not quite judicious about it?

Hovstad.

Not at all. But I thought it better to keep it till the spring, when people are beginning to look about them, and think of their summer quarters——

BURGOMASTER.

You were right, quite right, Mr. Hovstad.

Mrs. STOCKMANN

Yes, Thomas is really indefatigable where the Baths are concerned.

BURGOMASTER.

It is his duty as one of the staff.

Hovstad.

And of course he was really their creator.

BURGOMASTER.

Was he? Indeed! I gather that certain persons are of that opinion. But I should have thought that I, too, had a modest share in that undertaking.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Yes, that is what Thomas is always saying.

Hovstad.

No one dreams of denying it, Burgomaster. You set the thing going, and put it on a practical basis; everybody knows that. I only meant that the original idea was the doctor's.

BURGOMASTER.

Yes, my brother has certainly had ideas enough in his time—worse luck! But when it comes to realising them, Mr. Hovstad, we want men of another stamp. I should have thought that in this house at any rate —

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Why, my dear brother-in-law —

Hovstad.

Burgomaster, how can you — ?

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Do go in and have some supper, Mr. Hovstad; my husband is sure to be home directly.

HOVSTAD.

Thanks; just a mouthful, perhaps.

[He goes into the dining room.]

BURGOMASTER.

[Speaking in a low voice.] It is extraordinary how people who spring direct from the peasant class never can get over their want of tact.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

But why should you care? Surely you and Thomas can share the honour, like brothers.

BURGOMASTER.

Yes, one would suppose so; but it seems a share of the honour is not enough for some persons.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

What nonsense! You and Thomas always get on so well together [Listening.] There, I think I hear him.

[Goes and opens the door to the hall.]

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Laughing and talking loudly, without.] Here's another visitor for you, Katrina. Isn't it capital, eh? Come in, Captain Horster. Hang your coat on that peg. What! you don't wear an overcoat? Fancy, Katrina, I caught him in the street, and I could hardly get him to come in.

CAPTAIN HORSTER.

[Enters and bows to MRS. STOCKMANN]

DR. STOCKMANN.

[In the doorway.] In with you, boys. They're famishing again! Come along, Captain Horster; you must try our roast beef --

[*He forces HORSTER into the dining room.
ELIF and MORTEN follow them.*]

MRS. STOCKMANN.

But, Thomas, don't you see——

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Turning round in the doorway.] Oh, is that you, Peter! [Goes up to him and holds out his hand.] Now this is really capital.

BURGOMASTER.

Unfortunately, I have only a moment to spare ——

DR. STOCKMANN.

Nonsense! We shall have some toddy in a minute. You're not forgetting the toddy, Katrina?

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Of course not; the water's boiling.

[She goes into the dining room.]

BURGOMASTER.

Toddy too - — !

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes; sit down, and let's make ourselves comfortable.

BURGOMASTER.

Thanks: I never join in drinking parties.

DR. STOCKMANN.

But this isn't a party.

BURGOMASTER.

It seems to me:— [Looks towards the dining-room.] It's extraordinary how they can get through all that food.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Rubbing his hands.] Yes, doesn't it do one good to see young people eat? Always hungry! That's as it should be. They need good, solid meat to put stamina into them! It's they that have got to whip up the ferment of the future, Peter.

BURGOMASTER.

May I ask what there is to be "whipped up," as you call it?

DR. STOCKMANN.

You'll have to ask the young people that—when the time comes. We shan't see it, of course. Two old fogies like you and me——

BURGMASTER.

Come, come! Surely that is a very extraordinary expression to use——

DR. STOCKMANN.

Oh, you mustn't mind my nonsense, Peter. I'm in such glorious spirits, you see. I feel so unspeakably happy in the midst of all this growing, germinating life. Isn't it a marvellous time we live in! It seems as though a whole new world were springing up around us.

BURGMASTER.

Do you really think so?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Of course you can't see it as clearly as I do. You have passed your life in the midst of it all; and that deadens the impression. But I, who had to vegetate all those years in that little hole in the north, hardly ever seeing a soul that could speak a stimulating word to me—all this affects me as if I had suddenly dropped into the heart of some teeming metropolis——

BURGMASTER.

Hm: metropolis——

DR. STOCKMANN.

Oh; I know well enough that things are on a small scale here, compared with many other places. But there's life here—there's promise—there's an infinity of things to work and strive for; and that is the main point. [Calling.] Katrina, haven't there been any letters?

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[In the dining-room] No, none at all.

DR. STOCKMANN.

And then a good income, Peter! That's a thing one learns to appreciate when one has lived on starvation wages——

BURGOMASTER.

Good heavens----!

DR. STOCKMANN.

Oh yes, I can tell you we had often hard times of it up there. And now we can live like princes! To-day, for example, we had roast beef for dinner; and we've had some of it for supper too. Won't you have some? Come along—just look at it, at any rate——

BURGOMASTER.

No no; certainly not——

DR. STOCKMANN.

Well then, look here—do you see we've bought a table-cover?

BURGOMASTER.

Yes, so I observed.

DR. STOCKMANN.

And a lamp-shade too. Do you see? Katrina has been saving up for them. They make the room look comfortable, don't they? Come over here. No no no, not there! So— yes! Now you see how it concentrates the light ——. I really think it has quite an artistic effect. Eh?

BURGMASTER.

Yes, when one can afford such luxuries — —

DR. STOCKMANN.

Oh, I can afford it now. Katrina says I make almost as much as we spend.

BURGMASTER.

Ah —almost!

DR. STOCKMANN.

Besides, a man of science must live in some style. Why, I believe a mere sheriff<sup>1</sup> spends much more a year than I do.

BURGMASTER.

Yes, I should think so! A member of the superior magistracy——

DR. STOCKMANN.

Well then, even a common ship owner! A man of that sort will get through many times as much — — <sup>1</sup> Amtmand, the chief magistrate of an Amt or county; consequently a high dignitary in the official hierarchy.

BURGMASER.

That is natural, in your relative positions.

DR. STOCKMANN.

And after all, Peter, I really don't squander any money. But I can't deny myself the delight of having people about me—I must have them. After living so long out of the world, I find it a necessity of life to have bright, cheerful, freedom-loving, hard-working young fellows around me—and that's what they are, all of them, that are sitting there eating so heartily. I wish you knew more of Hovstad—

BURGMASER.

Ah, that reminds me—Hovstad was telling me that he is going to publish another article of yours.

DR. STOCKMANN.

An article of mine?

BURGMASER.

Yes, about the Baths. An article you wrote last winter.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Oh, that one? But I don't want that to appear for the present.

BURGMASER.

Why not? It seems to me this is the very time for it.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Very likely — under ordinary circumstances —
[Crosses the room]

BURGOMASTER.

[Following him with his eyes.] And what is unusual in the circumstances now?

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Standing still.] The fact is, Peter, I really cannot tell you just now; not this evening, at all events. There may prove to be a great deal that is unusual in the circumstances. On the other hand, there may be nothing at all. Very likely it's only my fancy.

BURGOMASTER.

Upon my word, you are very enigmatical. Is there anything in the wind? Anything I am to be kept in the dark about? I should think, as Chairman of the Bath Committee — —

DR. STOCKMANN.

And I should think that I — Well well, don't let us get our backs up, Peter.

BURGOMASTER.

God forbid! I am not in the habit of "getting my back up," as you express it. But I must absolutely insist that all arrangements shall be made and carried out in a business-like manner, and through the properly constituted authorities. I cannot be a party to crooked or underhand courses.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Have I ever been given to crooked or underhand courses?

BURGOMASTER.

At any rate you have an ingrained propensity to taking your own course. And that, in a well-ordered community, is almost as inadmissible. The individual must subordinate himself to society, or, more precisely, to the authorities whose business it is to watch over the welfare of society.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Maybe. But what the devil has that to do with me?

BURGOMASTER.

Why this is the very thing, my dear Thomas, that it seems you will never learn. But take care; you will have to pay for it --sooner or later. Now I have warned you. Good-bye.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Are you stark mad? You're on a totally wrong track——

BURGOMASTER.

I am not often on the wrong track. Moreover, I must request you not to—— [Bowing towards dining-room.] Good-bye, sister-in-law; good-day to you, gentlemen.

[He goes.]

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Enter, the sitting room | Has he gone?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, and in a fine temper, too.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Why, my dear Thomas, what have you been doing to him now?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Nothing at all. He can't possibly expect me to account to him for everything before the time comes.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

What have you to account to him for?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Hm; never mind about that, Katrina.—It's very odd that the postman doesn't come.

[HOVSTAD, BITLING, and HORSTER have risen from table and come forward into the sitting room. ELLI and MORTEN presently follow.]

BITLING.

[Stretching himself.] Ah! Strike me dead if one doesn't feel a new man after such a meal.

HOVSTAD.

The Burgomaster didn't seem in the best of tempers this evening.

DR. STOCKMANN.

That's his stomach. He has a very poor digestion

Hovstad.

I fancy it's the staff of the Messenger he finds it hardest to stomach.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

I thought you got on well enough with him.

Hovstad.

Oh, yes; but it's only a sort of armistice between us.

Billing.

That's it! That word sums up the situation.

DR. STOCKMANN.

We must remember that Peter's a lonely bachelor, poor devil! He has no home to be happy in, only business, business. And then all that cursed weak tea he goes and pours down his throat! Now then, chairs round the table, boys! Katrina, shan't we have the toddy now?

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[Going towards the dining-room.] I am just getting it.

DR. STOCKMANN.

And you, Captain Horster, sit beside me on the sofa. So rare a guest as you - - Sit down, gentlemen, sit down.

[The men sit round the table; Mrs. STOCKMANN brings in a tray with kettle, glasses, decanters, etc.]

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Here you have it: here's arrak, and this is rum, and this cognac. Now, help yourselves.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Taking a glass.] So we will! [While the toddy is being mixed.] And now out with the cigars. Eilif, I think you know where the box is. And Morten, you may fetch my pipe. [The boys go into the room on the right.] I have a suspicion that Eilif sneaks a cigar now and then, but I pretend not to notice. [Calls.] And my smoking-cap, Morten! Katrina, can't you tell him where I left it? Ah, he's got it. [The boys bring in the things.] Now, friends, help yourselves. I stick to my pipe, you know; this one has been on many a stormy journey with me, up there in the north. [They drink glasses.] Your health! Ah, I can tell you it's better fun to sit cosily here, safe from wind and weather.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[Who sits knitting.] Do you sail soon, Captain Horster?

HORSTER.

I hope to be ready for a start by next week.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

And you're going to America?

HORSTER.

Yes, that's the intention.

BILLING.

But then you'll miss the election of the new Town Council.

HORSTER.

Is there to be an election again?

BILLING.

Didn't you know?

HORSTER.

No, I don't trouble myself about those things.

BILLING.

But I suppose you take an interest in public affairs?

HORSTER.

No, I don't understand anything about them.

BILLING.

All the same, one ought at least to vote.

HORSTER.

Even those who don't understand anything about it?

BILLING.

Understand? Why, what do you mean by that? Society is like a ship: every man must put his hand to the helm.

HØVSTAD.

That may be all right on shore; but at sea it wouldn't do at all.

HØVSTAD.

It's remarkable how little sailors care about public affairs, as a rule.

BILLING.

Most extraordinary.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Sailors are like birds of passage: they are at home both in the south and in the north. So it behoves the rest of us to be all the more energetic, Mr Høvstad. Will there be anything of public interest in the People's Messenger to-morrow?

HØVSTAD.

Nothing of local interest. But the day after to-morrow I think of printing your article —

DR. STOCKMANN.

Oh confound it, that article! No, you'll have to hold it over.

HØVSTAD.

Really? We happen to have plenty of space, and I should say this was the very time for it —

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes yes, you may be right; but you must hold it over all the same. I shall explain to you by-and-by- —

[PETRA, wearing a hat and cloak, and with a number of exercise books under her arm, enters from the hall.]

PETRA.

Good evening.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Good evening, Petra. Is that you?

[General greetings. PETRA puts her cloak, hat, and books on a chair by the door.]

PETRA.

Here you all are, enjoying yourselves, while I've been out slaving.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Well then, you come and enjoy yourself too.

BILLING.

May I mix you a little — ?

PETRA.

[Coming towards the table.] Thank you, I'd rather help myself- you always make it too strong. By the way, father, I have a letter for you.

[Goes to the chair where her things are lying.]

DR. STOCKMANN.

A letter! From whom?

PETRA.

[Searching in the pocket of her cloak.] I got it from the postman just as I was going out - - -

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Rising and going towards her.] And you only bring it me now?

PETRA.

I really hadn't time to run up again. Here it is.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Seizing the letter.] Let me see, let me see, child.
[Reads the address.] Yes; this is it—!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Is it the one you have been so anxious about, Thomas?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, it is. I must go at once— Where shall I find a light, Katrina? Is there no lamp in my study again!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Yes—the lamp is lighted. It's on the writing-table.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Good, good. Excuse me one moment—

[He goes in'to the room on the right.]

PETRA.

What can it be, mother?

MRS. STOCKMANN.

I don't know. For the last few days he has been continually on the look out for the postman.

BILLING.

Probably a country patient- - -

PETRA.

Poor father! He'll soon have far too much to do.
[Mixes her toddy.] Ah, this will taste good!

HØVSLAD.

Have you been teaching in the night school as well to day?

PETRA.

[Sipping from her glass.] Two hours.

BILLING.

And four hours in the morning at the institute— --

PETRA.

[Sitting down by the table.] Five hours.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

And I see you have exercises to correct this evening.

PETRA.

Yes, a heap of them

HORSTER.

It seems to me you have plenty to do, too.

PETRA.

Yes; but I like it. You feel so delightfully tired after it.

BILLING.

Do you like that?

PETRA.

Yes, for then you sleep so well.

MORTEN.

I say, Petra, you must be a great sinner

PETRA.

A sinner?

MORTEN.

Yes, if you work so hard. Mr. Rorlund<sup>1</sup> says work is a punishment for our sins.

EILIF.

[Contemptuously.] Bosh! What a silly you are to believe such stuff as that.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Come come, Eilif.

<sup>1</sup> See Pillars of Society.

BILLING.

[Laughing.] Capital, capital!

HOVSTAD.

Should you not like to work so hard, Morten?

MORTEN.

No, I shouldn't.

HOVSTAD.

Then what will you do with yourself in the world?

MORTEN.

I should like to be a Viking.

ELLIE.

But then you'd have to be a heathen.

MORTEN.

Well, so I would.

BILLING.

There I agree with you, Morten! I say just the same.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[Making a sign to him] No, no, Mr. Billing, I'm sure you don't.

BILLING.

Strike me dead but I do, though. I am a heathen, and I'm proud of it. You'll see we shall all be heathens soon.

MORTEN.

And shall we be able to do anything we like then?

BILLING.

Well, you see, Morten——

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Now run away, boys; I'm sure you have lessons to prepare for to-morrow.

ELIEF.

You might let me stay just a little longer——

MRS. STOCKMANN.

No, you must go too. Be off, both of you.

[The boys say good night and go into the room on the left.]

HOVSTAD.

Do you really think it can hurt the boys to hear these things?

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Well, I don't know; I don't like it.

PEIRA.

Really, mother, I think you are quite wrong there.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Perhaps. But I don't like it—not here, at home.

PETRA.

There's no end of hypocrisy both at home and at school. At home you must hold your tongue, and at school you have to stand up and tell lies to the children.

HORSTER.

Have you to tell lies?

PETRA.

Yes; do you think we don't have to tell them many and many a thing we don't believe ourselves?

BILLING.

Ah, that's too true

PETRA.

If only I could afford it, I should start a school myself, and things should be very different there.

BILLING.

Oh, afford it ----!

HORSTER.

If you really think of doing that, Miss Stockmann, I shall be delighted to let you have a room at my place. You know my father's old house is nearly empty; there's a great big dining room on the ground floor----

PETRA.

[Laughing.] Oh, thank you very much--but I'm afraid it won't come to anything.

Hovstad.

No, I fancy Miss Petra is more likely to go over to journalism. By the way, have you had time to look into the English novel you promised to translate for us?

Petra.

Not yet. But you shall have it in good time.

[Dr. Stockmann enters from his room, with the letter open in his hand.]

Dr. Stockmann.

[Flourishing the letter.] Here's news, I can tell you, that will waken up the town!

Bjerring.

News?

Mrs. Stockmann.

What news?

Dr. Stockmann.

A great discovery, Kathina!

Hovstad.

Indeed?

Mrs. Stockmann.

Made by you?

Dr. Stockmann.

Precisely by me! [Walks up and down.] Now let them go on accusing me of fads and crack-brained notions. But they won't dare to! Ha-ha! I tell you they won't dare!

PETER.

Do tell us what it is, father.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Well well, give me time, and you shall hear all about it. If only I had Peter here now! This just shows how we men can go about forming judgments like the blindest moles—

HOVSTAD.

What do you mean, doctor?

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Stopping beside the table.] Isn't it the general opinion that our town is a healthy place?

HOVSTAD.

Of course.

DR. STOCKMANN.

A quite exceptionally healthy place, indeed—a place to be warmly recommended, both to invalids and people in health—

MRS. STOCKMANN.

My dear Thomas—

DR. STOCKMANN.

And assuredly we haven't failed to recommend and belaud it. I've sung its praises again and again, both in the Messenger and in pamphlets——

Hovstad.

Well, what then?

DR. STOCKMANN.

These Baths, that we've called the pulse of the town, its vital nerve, and——and the devil knows what else——

Billing.

"Our city's palpitating heart," I once ventured to call them in a convivial moment——

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, I daresay. Well——do you know what they really are, these mighty, magnificent, belauded Baths, that have cost so much money——do you know what they are?

Hovstad.

No, what are they?

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Do tell us.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Simply a pestiferous hole.

Petra.

The Baths, father?

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[ At the same time. ] Our Baths!

HOVSTAD.

[ Also at the same time ] But, Doctor——!

BILLING.

Oh, it's incredible!

DR. STOCKMANN.

I tell you the whole place is a poisonous whited-sepulchre; noxious in the highest degree! All that filth up there in the Mill Dale—the stuff that smells so horribly—taints the water in the feed-pipes of the Pump Room; and the same accursed poisonous refuse oozes out by the beach——

HOVSTAD.

Where the sea baths are?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Exactly.

HOVSTAD.

But how are you so sure of all this, Doctor?

DR. STOCKMANN.

I've investigated the whole thing as conscientiously as possible. I've long had my suspicions about it. Last year we had some extraordinary cases of illness among the patients—both typhoid and gastric attacks——

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Yes, I remember.

DR. STOCKMANN.

We thought at the time that the visitors had brought the infection with them; but afterwards - last winter - I began to question that. So I set about testing the water as well as I could.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

It was that you were working so hard at!

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, you may well say I've worked, Katrina. But here, you know, I hadn't the necessary scientific appliances; so I sent samples both of our drinking-water and of our sea-water to the University, for exact analysis by a chemist.

HOVSTAD.

And you have received his report?

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Showing letter.] Here it is! And it proves beyond dispute the presence of putrifying organic matter in the water—millions of infusoria. It's absolutely pernicious to health, whether used internally or externally.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

What a blessing you found it out in time!

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, you may well say that.

HOVSTAD.

And what do you intend to do now, Doctor?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Why, to set things right, of course.

HOVSTAD.

You think it can be done, then?

DR. STOCKMANN.

It must be done. Else the whole Baths are useless, ruined. But there's no fear. I'm quite clear as to what is required.

MRS STOCKMANN.

But, my dear Thomas, why should you have made such a secret of all this?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Would you have had me rush all over the town and chatter about it, before I was quite certain? No, thank you; I'm not so mad as that.

PETRA.

But to us at home——

DR. STOCKMANN.

I couldn't say a word to a living soul. But to-morrow you may look in at the Badger's——

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Oh, Thomas!

DR. STOCKMANN.

Well well, at your grandfather's. The old fellow will be astonished! He thinks I'm not quite right in my head - yes, and plenty of others think the same, I've noticed. But now these good people shall see - yes, they shall see now! [He walks up and down rubbing his hands.] What a stir there will be in the town, Katrina! Just think of it! All the water-pipes will have to be relaid.

HOVSTAD.

[Rising.] All the water pipes - ?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Why, of course. The intake is too low down; it must be moved much higher up.

PETRA.

So you were right, after all

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, do you remember, Petra? I wrote against it when they were beginning the works. But no one would listen to me then. Now, you may be sure, I shall give them my full broadside— for of course I've prepared a statement for the Directors; it has been lying ready a whole week; I've only been waiting for this report. [Points to letter.] But now they shall have it at once. [Goes into his room and returns with a MS. in his hand.] See! Four closely-written sheets! And I'll enclose the report. A newspaper, Katrina! Get me something to wrap them up in. There—that's it. Give it to—to— [Stamps.]—what the devil's her name? Give it to the girl, I mean, and tell her to take it at once to the Burgomaster.

[MRS. STOCKMANN goes out with packet through the dining-room.]

PETRA.

What do you think Uncle Peter will say, father?

DR. STOCKMANN.

What should he say? He can't possibly be otherwise than pleased that so important a fact has been brought to light.

HOVSTAD.

I suppose you will let me put a short announcement of your discovery in the Messenger.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, I shall be much obliged if you will.

HOVSTAD.

It is highly desirable that the public should know about it as soon as possible.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, certainly.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[Returning.] She's gone with it.

BILLING.

Strike me dead if you won't be the first man in the town, Doctor!

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Waks up and down in high glee.] Oh, nonsense! After all, I have done no more than my duty. I've been a lucky treasure-hunter, that's all. But all the same——

BILLING.

Hovstad, don't you think the town ought to get up a torchlight procession in honour of Dr. Stockmann?

HOVSTAD.

I shall certainly propose it.

BILLING.

And I'll talk it over with Aslaksen.

DR. STOCKMANN.

No, my dear friends; let all such claptrap alone. I won't hear of anything of the sort. And if the Directors should want to raise my salary, I won't accept it. I tell you, Katrina, I will not accept it.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

You are quite right, Thomas.

PETRA.

[Raising her glass.] Your health, father!

HOVSTAD and BILLING.

Your health, your health, Doctor!

HORSTER.

[Clinking glasses with the DOCTOR.] I hope you may have nothing but joy of your discovery.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Thanks, thanks, my dear friends! I can't tell you how happy I am—! Oh, what a blessing it is to feel that you have deserved well of your native town and your fellow-citizens. Hurrah, Katrina!

[He puts both his arms round her neck, and whirls her round with him. MRS. STOCKMANN screams and struggles. A burst of laughter, applause, and cheers for the DOCTOR. The boys thrust their heads in at the door.]

ACT SECOND.

The DOCTOR'S sitting room. The dining-room door is closed. Morning.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[Enters from the dining-room with a sealed letter in her hand, goes to the foremost door on the right, and peeps in.] Are you there, 'Thomas?

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Within.] Yes, I have just come in. [Enters]
What is it?

MRS. STOCKMANN.

A letter from your brother.

[Hands it to him.]

DR. STOCKMANN.

Aha, let us see. [Opens the envelope and reads]
"The MS. sent me is returned herewith ---"
[Reads on, mumbling to himself.] Hm —

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Well, what does he say?

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Putting the paper in his pocket.] Nothing; only that he'll come up himself about midday.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Then be sure you remember to stop at home.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Oh, I can easily manage that; I've finished my morning's visits.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

I am very curious to know how he takes it.

DR. STOCKMANN.

You'll see he won't be over-pleased that it is I that have made the discovery, and not he himself.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Ah, that's just what I'm afraid of.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Of course at bottom he'll be glad. But still-- Peter is damnable unwilling that any one but himself should do anything for the good of the town.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Do you know, Thomas, I think you might stretch a point, and share the honour with him. Couldn't it appear that it was he that put you on the track---?

DR. STOCKMANN.

By all means, for aught I care. If only I can get things put straight——

[Old MORTEN KILL puts his head in at the hall door, and asks slyly :]

MORTEN KILL.

Is it—is it true?

MRS. STOCKMANN

[Going towards him.] Father, is that you?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Hallo, father-in-law! good morning, good morning.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Do come in.

MORTEN KILL.

Yes, if it's true; if not, I'm off again.

DR. STOCKMANN.

If what is true?

MORTEN KILL.

This crazy business about the water works. Now, is it true?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Why, of course it is. But how came you to hear of it?

MORTEN KILL.

[Coming in.] Petra looked in on her way to the school——

DR. STOCKMANN.

Oh, did she?

MORTEN KILL.

Ay ay—and she told me —. I thought she was only making game of me; but that's not like Petra either.

DR. STOCKMANN.

No, indeed; how could you think so?

MORTEN KILL.

Oh, you can never be sure of anybody. You may be made a fool of before you know where you are. So it is true, after all?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Most certainly it is. Do sit down, father-in-law. [Forces him down on the sofa.] Now isn't it a real blessing for the town ?

MORTEN KILL.

[Suppressing his laughter.] A blessing for the town?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, that I made this discovery in time——

MORTEN KIL.

[As before.] Ay, ay, ay! -Well, I could never have believed that you would play monkey-tricks with your very own brother.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Monkey tricks!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Why, father dear- -

MORTEN KIL.

[Resting his hands and chin on the top of his stick and blinking slyly at the DOCTOR.] What was it again? Wasn't it that some animals had got into the water-pipes?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes; infusorial animals.

MORTEN KIL.

And any number of these animals had got in, Petra said- whole swarms of them.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Certainly; hundreds of thousands.

MORTEN KIL.

But no one can see them -isn't that it?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Quite right; no one can see them.

MORTEN KIL.

[With a quiet, chucking laugh.] I'll be damned if that isn't the best thing I've heard of you yet.

DR. STOCKMANN.

What do you mean?

MORTEN KIL.

But you'll never in this world make the Burgo master take in anything of the sort.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Well, that we shall see.

MORTEN KIL.

Do you really think he'll be so crazy?

DR. STOCKMANN.

I hope the whole town will be so crazy.

MORTEN KIL.

The whole town! Well, I don't say but it may. But it serves them right; it'll teach them a lesson. They wanted to be so much cleverer than we old fellows. They hounded me out of the Town Council. Yes; I tell you they hounded me out like a dog, that they did. But now it's their turn. Just you keep up the game with them, Stockmann.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, but, father-in-law ——

MORTEN KIL.

Keep it up, I say. [Rising.] If you can make the Burgomaster and his gang eat humble pie, I'll give a hundred crowns straight away to the poor.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Come, that's good of you.

MORTEN KIL.

Of course I've little enough to throw away; but if you can manage that, I shall certainly remember the poor at Christmas-time, to the tune of fifty crowns.

[Hovstad enters from hall]

HOVSTAD.

Good morning! [Pausing.] Oh! I beg your pardon——

DR. STOCKMANN.

Not at all. Come in, come in.

MORTEN KIL.

[Chuckling again.] He! Is he in it too?

HOVSTAD.

What do you mean?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, of course he is.

MORTEN KIL.

I might have known it! It's to go into the papers. Ah, you're the one, Stockmann! Do you two lay your heads together; I'm off.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Oh no, don't go yet, father-in-law.

MORTEN KIH.

No, I'm off now. Play them all the monkey tricks you can think of. Deuce take me but you shan't lose by it.

[He goes, MRS. STOCKMANN accompanying him.]

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Laughing.] What do you think—? The old fellow doesn't believe a word of all this about the water works.

HOFSTAD.

Was that what he ?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes; that was what we were talking about. And I daresay you have come on the same business?

HOFSTAD.

Yes. Have you a moment to spare, Doctor?

DR. STOCKMANN.

As many as you like, my dear fellow.

HOFSTAD.

Have you heard anything from the Burgomaster?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Not yet. He'll be here presently.

Hovstad.

I have been thinking the matter over since last evening.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Well?

Hovstad.

To you, as a doctor and a man of science, this business of the water works appears an isolated affair. I daresay it hasn't occurred to you that a good many other things are bound up with it?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Indeed! In what way? Let us sit down, my dear fellow. No; there, on the sofa.

[Hovstad sits on sofa; the Doctor in an easy-chair on the other side of the table.]

DR. STOCKMANN.

Well, so you think ——?

Hovstad.

You said yesterday that the water is polluted by impurities in the soil

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, undoubtedly; the mischief comes from that poisonous swamp up in the Mill Dale.

Hovstad.

Excuse me, Doctor, but I think it comes from a very different swamp.

DR. STOCKMANN.

What swamp may that be ?

Hovstad.

The swamp in which our whole municipal life is rotting.

DR. STOCKMANN.

The devil, Mr. Hovstad ! What notion is this you've got hold of ?

Hovstad.

All the affairs of the town have gradually drifted into the hands of a pack of bureaucrats

DR. STOCKMANN.

Come now, they're not all bureaucrats

Hovstad.

No ; but those who are not are the friends and adherents of those who are. We are entirely under the thumb of a ring of wealthy men, men of old family and position in the town.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, but they are also men of ability and insight.

Hovstad.

Did they show ability and insight when they hid the water-pipes where they are ?

DR. STOCKMANN.

No ; that, of course, was a piece of stupidity. But that will be set right now.

Hovstad.

Do you think it will go so smoothly?

Dr. Stockmann.

Well, smoothly or not, it will have to be done.

Hovstad.

Yes, if the press exerts its influence.

Dr. Stockmann.

Not at all necessary, my dear fellow; I am sure my brother —

Hovstad.

Excuse me, Doctor, but I must tell you that I think of taking the matter up

Dr. Stockmann,

In the paper?

Hovstad.

Yes. When I took over the People's Messenger, I was determined to break up the ring of obstinate old blockheads who hold everything in their hands.

Dr. Stockmann.

But you told me yourself what came of it. You nearly ruined the paper.

Hovstad.

Yes, at that time we had to draw in our horns, that's true enough. The whole Bath scheme might have fallen through if these men had been sent about their business. But now the Baths are an accomplished fact, and we can get on without these august personages.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Get on without them, yes; but still we owe them a great deal.

HOVSTAD.

The debt shall be duly acknowledged. But a journalist of my democratic tendencies cannot let such an opportunity slip through his fingers. We must explode the tradition of official infallibility. That rubbish must be got rid of, like every other superstition.

DR. STOCKMANN.

There I am with you with all my heart, Mr. Hovstad. If it's a superstition, away with it!

HOVSTAD.

I should be sorry to attack the Burgomaster, as he is your brother. But I know you think with me--the truth before all other considerations.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Why, of course. [Veheemently] But still ! but still !

HOVSTAD.

You mustn't think ill of me. I am neither more self-interested nor more ambitious than other men.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Why, my dear fellow—who says you are?

Hovstad.

I come of humble folk, as you know; and I have had ample opportunities of seeing what the lower classes really require. And that is to have a share in the direction of public affairs, Doctor. That is what develops ability and knowledge and self-respect.

DR. STOCKMANN.

I understand that perfectly.

Hovstad.

Yes; and I think a journalist means a heavy responsibility if he lets slip a chance of helping to emancipate the downtrodden masses. I know well enough that our oligarchy will denounce me as an agitator, and so forth; but what do I care? If only my conscience is clear, I —

DR. STOCKMANN.

Just so, just so, my dear Mr. Hovstad. But still — deuce take it — -! [A knock at the door] Come in!

[ASLAKSEN, the printer, appears at the door leading to the hall. He is humbly but respectably dressed in black, wears a white necktie, slightly crumpled, and has a silk hat and gloves in his hand.]

ASLAKSEN.

[Bowing.] I beg pardon, Doctor, for making so bold — -

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Rising.] Hallo! If it isn't Mr. Aslaksen!

ASLAKSEN.

Yes, it's me, Doctor.

Hovstad.

[Rising.] Is it me you want, Aslaksen?

ASLAKSEN.

No, not at all. I didn't know you were here. No, it's the Doctor himself — -

DR. STOCKMANN.

Well, what can I do for you?

ASLAKSEN.

Is it true, what Mr. Billing tells me, that you're going to get us a better set of water works?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, for the Baths.

ASLAKSEN.

Of course, of course. Then I just looked in to say that I'll back up the movement with all my might.

Hovstad.

[To the Doctor.] You see!

DR. STOCKMANN.

I'm sure I thank you heartily; but —

ASLAKSEN.

You may find it no such bad thing to have us small middle class men at your back. We form what you may call a compact majority in the town--when we really make up our minds, that's to say. And it's always well to have the majority with you, Doctor.

DR. STOCKMANN.

No doubt, no doubt; but I can't conceive that any special measures will be necessary in this case. I should think in so clear and straightforward a matter--

ASLAKSEN.

Yes, but all the same, it can do no harm. I know the local authorities very well-- the powers that be are not over ready to adopt suggestions from outsiders. So I think it wouldn't be amiss if we made some sort of a demonstration.

HØVSTAD.

Precisely my opinion.

DR. STOCKMANN.

A demonstration, you say? But in what way would you demonstrate?

ASLAKSEN.

Of course with great moderation, Doctor. I always insist upon moderation; for moderation is a citizen's first virtue--at least that's my way of thinking.

DR. STOCKMANN.

We all know that, Mr. Aslaksen.

ASLAKSEN.

Yes, I think my moderation is generally recognised. And this affair of the water-works is very important for us small middle-class men. The Baths bid fair to become, as you might say, a little gold-mine for the town. We shall all have to live by the Baths, especially we house owners. So we want to support the Baths all we can; and as I am Chairman of the House-owners' Association——

DR. STOCKMANN.

Well—— ?

ASLAKSEN.

And as I'm an active worker for the 'Temperance'<sup>1</sup> Society of course you know, Doctor, that I'm a temperance man?

DR. STOCKMANN.

To be sure, to be sure.

ASLAKSEN.

Well, you'll understand that I come in contact with a great many people. And as I'm known to be a prudent and law-abiding citizen, as you yourself remarked, Doctor, I have a certain influence in the town, and hold some power in my hands — though I say it that shouldn't.

DR. STOCKMANN.

I know that very well, Mr. Aslaksen.

<sup>1</sup> The word "mådehold," in Norwegian, means both "moderation" and "temperance."

ASLAKSEN.

Well then, you see—it would be easy for me to get up an address, if it came to a pinch.

DR. STOCKMANN.

An address?

ASLAKSEN.

Yes, a kind of vote of thanks to you, from the citizens of the town, for your action in a matter of such general concern. Of course it will have to be drawn up with all fitting moderation, so as to give no offence to the authorities and parties in power. But so long as we're careful about that, no one can take it ill, I should think.

HOVSTAD.

Well, even if they didn't particularly like it——

ASLAKSEN.

No no no; no offence to the powers that be, Mr. Hovstad. No opposition to people that can take it out of us again so easily. I've had enough of that in my time; no good ever comes of it. But no one can object to the free but temperate expression of a citizen's opinion.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Shaking his hand.] I can't tell you, my dear Mr. Aslaksen, how heartily it delights me to find so much support among my fellow-townsmen. I'm so happy—so happy! Come, you'll have a glass of sherry? Eh?

ASLAKSEN.

No, thank you. I never touch spirituous liquors.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Well, then, a glass of beer -- what do you say to that?

ASLAKSEN.

Thanks, not that either, Doctor. I never take anything so early in the day. And now I'll be off round the town, and talk to some of the house-owners, and prepare public opinion.

DR. STOCKMANN.

It's extremely kind of you, Mr. Aslaksen; but I really cannot get it into my head that all these preparations are necessary. The affair seems to me so simple and self-evident.

ASLAKSEN.

The authorities always move slowly, Doctor. God forbid I should blame them for it ---

HOVSTAD.

We'll stir them up in the paper to-morrow, Aslaksen.

ASLAKSEN.

No violence, Mr. Hovstad. Proceed with moderation, or you'll do nothing with them. Take my advice; I've picked up experience in the school of life. And now I'll say good morning, Doctor. You know now that at least you have us small middle-class men behind you, solid as a wall. You have the compact majority on your side, Doctor!

DR. STOCKMANN.

Many thanks, my dear Mr. Aslaksen. [Holds out his hand.] Good-bye, good bye.

ASLAKSEN.

Are you coming to the office, Mr. Hovstad?

HOVSTAD.

I shall come on presently. I have still one or two things to arrange.

ASLAKSEN

Very well.

[Bows and goes. DR. STOCKMANN accompanies him into the hall.]

HOVSTAD.

[As the DOCTOR re enters.] Well, what do you say to that, Doctor? Don't you think it is high time we should give all this weak kneed, half-hearted cowardice a good shaking up?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Are you speaking of Aslaksen?

HOVSTAD.

Yes, I am. He's a decent enough fellow, but he's one of those who are sunk in the swamp. And most people here are just like him; they are for ever wavering and wobbling from side to side ; what with scruples and misgivings, they never dare advance a step.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, but Aslaksen seems to me thoroughly well-intentioned.

HOVSTAD.

There is one thing I value more than good intentions, and that is an attitude of manly self-reliance.

DR. STOCKMANN.

There I am quite with you.

HOVSTAD.

So I am going to seize this opportunity, and try whether I can't for once put a little grit into their good intentions. The worship of authority must be rooted up in this town. This gross, inexcusable blunder of the water works must be brought home clearly to every voter.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Very well. If you think it's for the good of the community, so be it ; but not till I have spoken to my brother.

HOVSTAD.

At all events, I shall be writing my leader in the meantime. And if the Burgomaster won't take the matter up——

DR. STOCKMANN.

But how can you conceive his refusing?

Hovstad.

Oh, it's not inconceivable. And then ?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Well then, I promise you : look here—in that case you may print my paper—put it in just as it is.

Hovstad.

May I? Is that a promise?

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Handing him the manuscript.] There it is; take it with you. You may as well read it in any case; you can return it to me afterwards.

Hovstad.

Very good; I shall do so. And now, good-bye, Doctor.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Good bye, good-bye. You'll see it will all go smoothly, Mr. Hovstad—as smoothly as possible.

Hovstad.

Hm—we shall see.

[Bows and goes out through the hall.]

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Going to the dining room door and looking in] Katrina! Hallo! are you back, Petra?

PETRA.

[Entering.] Yes, I've just got back from school.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[Entering] Hasn't he been here yet?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Peter? No; but I have been having a long talk with Hovstad. He's quite enthusiastic about my discovery. It turns out to be of much wider import than I thought at first. So he has placed his paper at my disposal, if I should require it.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Do you think you will?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Not I! But at the same time, one cannot but be proud to know that the enlightened, independent press is on one's side. And what do you think? I have had a visit from the Chairman of the House owners' Association too.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Really? What did he want?

DR. STOCKMANN.

To assure me of his support. They will all stand by me at a pinch. Katrina, do you know what I have behind me?

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Behind you? No. What have you behind you?

DR. STOCKMANN.

The compact majority!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Oh! Is that good for you, Thomas?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, indeed; I should think it was good! [Rubbing his hands as he walks up and down.] Great God! what a delight it is to feel oneself in such brotherly unison with one's fellow-townsmen!

PETRA.

And to do so much that's good and useful, father!

DR. STOCKMANN.

And all for one's native town, too!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

There's the bell

DR. STOCKMANN.

That must be he. [Knock at the door.] Come in!

[Enter BURGOMASTER STOCKMANN from the hall.]

BURGMASER.

Good-morning.

DR. STOCKMANN.

I'm glad to see you, Peter.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Good morning, brother-in-law. How are you?

BURGMASER.

Oh, thanks, so so. [To the DOCTOR.] Yesterday evening, after office hours, I received from you a dissertation upon the state of the water at the Baths.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes. Have you read it?

BURGMASER.

I have.

DR. STOCKMANN.

And what do you think of the affair?

BURGMASER.

Hm — [With a sidelong glance.]

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Come, Petra.

[She and PETRA go into the room on the left.]

BURGMASER.

[After a pause.] Was it necessary to make all these investigations behind my back?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, till I was absolutely certain, I —

BURGOMASTER.

And you are absolutely certain now?

DR. STOCKMANN.

My paper must surely have convinced you of that.

BURGOMASTER.

Is it your intention to submit this statement to the Board of Directors, as a sort of official document?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Of course. Something must be done in the matter, and that promptly.

BURGOMASTER.

As usual, you use very strong expressions in your statement. Amongst other things, you say that what we offer our visitors is a slow poison.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Why, Peter, what else can it be called? Only think—poisoned water both internally and externally! And that to poor invalids who come to us in all confidence, and pay us handsomely to cure them!

BURGOMASTER.

And then you announce as your conclusion that we must build a sewer to carry off the alleged impurities from the Mill Dale, and must relay all the water-pipes.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes. Can you suggest any other plan?—I know of none.

BURGOMASTER.

I found a pretext for looking in at the town engineer's this morning, and—in a half-jesting way—I mentioned these alterations as things we might possibly have to consider, at some future time.

DR. STOCKMANN.

At some future time!

BURGOMASTER.

Of course he smiled at what he thought my extravagance. Have you taken the trouble to think what your proposed alterations would cost? From what the engineer said, I gathered that the expenses would probably mount up to several hundred thousand crowns.

•

DR. STOCKMANN.

So much as that?

BURGOMASTER.

Yes. But that is not the worst. The work would take at least two years.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Two years! Do you mean to say two whole years?

BURGOMASTER.

At least. And what are we to do with the Baths in the meanwhile? Are we to close them? We should have no alternative. Do you think any one would come here, if it got abroad that the water was pestilential?

DR. STOCKMANN.

But, Peter, that's precisely what it is.

BURGOMASTER.

And all this now, just now, when the Baths are doing so well! Neighbouring towns, too, are not without their claims to rank as health-resorts. Do you think they would not at once set to work to divert the full stream of visitors to themselves? Undoubtedly they would; and we should be left stranded. We should probably have to give up the whole costly undertaking; and so you would have ruined your native town.

DR. STOCKMANN.

I—ruined——!

BURGOMASTER.

It is only through the Baths that the town has any future worth speaking of. You surely know that as well as I do.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Then what do you think should be done?

BURGOMASTER.

I have not succeeded in convincing myself that the condition of the water at the Baths is as serious as your statement represents

DR. STOCKMANN.

I tell you it's if anything worse--or will be in the summer, when the hot weather sets in.

BURGOMASTER.

I repeat that I believe you exaggerate greatly. A competent physician should know what measures to take--he should be able to obviate deleterious influences, and to counteract them in case they should make themselves unmistakably felt.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Indeed--? And then--?

BURGOMASTER.

The existing water works are, once for all, a fact, and must naturally be treated as such. But when the time comes, the Directors will probably not be indisposed to consider whether it may not be possible, without unreasonable pecuniary sacrifices, to introduce certain improvements.

DR. STOCKMANN.

And do you imagine I could ever be a party to such dishonesty?

BURGOMASTER.

Dishonesty?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, it would be dishonesty—a fraud, a lie, an absolute crime against the public, against society as a whole!

BURGOMASTER.

I have not, as I before remarked, been able to convince myself that there is really any such imminent danger.

DR. STOCKMANN.

You have! You must have! I know that my demonstration is absolutely clear and convincing. And you understand it perfectly, Peter, only you won't admit it. It was you who insisted that both the Bath-buildings and the water-works should be placed where they now are; and it's that—it's that damned blunder that you won't confess. Pshaw! Do you think I don't see through you?

BURGOMASTER.

And even if it were so? If I do watch over my reputation with a certain anxiety, I do it for the good of the town. Without moral authority I cannot guide and direct affairs in the way I consider most conducive to the general welfare. Therefore—and on various other grounds—it is of great moment to me that your statement should not be submitted to the Board of Directors. It must be kept back, for the good of the community. Later on I will bring up the matter for discussion, and we will do the best we can, quietly; but not a word, not a whisper, of this unfortunate business must come to the public ears

DR. STOCKMANN.

But it can't be prevented now, my dear Peter.

BURGOMASTER.

It must and shall be prevented.

DR. STOCKMANN.

It can't be, I tell you; far too many people know about it already.

BURGOMASTER.

Know about it! Who? Surely not those fellows on the People's Messenger—?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Oh yes; they know. The liberal, independent press will take good care you do your duty.

BURGOMASTER.

[After a short pause.] You are an amazingly reckless man, Thomas. Have not you reflected what the consequences of this may be to yourself?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Consequences?—Consequences to me?

BURGOMASTER.

Yes—to you and yours.

DR. STOCKMANN.

What the devil do you mean?

BURGMASTER.

I believe I have always shown myself ready and willing to lend you a helping hand.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, you have, and I thank you for it.

BURGMASTER.

I ask for no thanks. Indeed, I was in some measure forced to act as I did—for my own sake. I always hoped I should be able to keep you a little in check, if I helped to improve your pecuniary position.

DR. STOCKMANN.

What! So it was only for your own sake——!

BURGMASTER.

In a measure, I say. It is painful for a man in an official position, when his nearest relative goes and compromises himself time after time.

DR. STOCKMANN.

And you think I do that?

BURGMASTER.

Yes, unfortunately, you do, without knowing it. Yours is a turbulent, unruly, rebellious spirit. And then you have an unhappy propensity for rushing into print upon every possible and impossible occasion. You no sooner hit upon an idea than you must needs write a newspaper article or a whole pamphlet about it.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Isn't it a citizen's duty, when he has conceived a new idea, to communicate it to the public!

BURGOMASTER.

Oh, the public has no need for new ideas. The public gets on best with the good old recognised ideas it has already.

DR. STOCKMANN.

You say that right out!

BURGOMASTER.

Yes, I must speak frankly to you for once. Hitherto I have tried to avoid it, for I know how irritable you are; but now I must tell you the truth, Thomas. You have no conception how much you injure yourself by your officiousness. You complain of the authorities, ay, of the Government itself—you cry them down and maintain that you have been slighted, persecuted. But what else can you expect, with your impossible disposition?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Oh, indeed! So I am impossible, am I?

BURGOMASTER.

Yes, Thomas, you are an impossible man to work with. I know that from experience. You have no consideration for any one or anything; you seem quite to forget that you have me to thank for your position as medical officer of the Baths——

DR. STOCKMANN.

It was mine by right! Mine, and no one else's! I was the first to discover the town's capabilities as a watering-place; I saw them, and, at that time, I alone. For years I fought single-handed for this idea of mine; I wrote and wrote——

BURGOMASTER.

No doubt; but then the right time had not come. Of course, in that out-of-the-world corner you could not judge of that. As soon as the propitious moment arrived, I—and others—took the matter in hand——

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, and you went and bungled the whole of my glorious plan. Oh, we see now what a set of wiseacres you were!

BURGOMASTER.

All I can see is that you are again seeking an outlet for your pugnacity. You want to make an onslaught on your superiors - that is an old habit of yours. You cannot endure any authority over you; you look askance at any one who holds a higher post than your own; you regard him as a personal enemy—and then you care nothing what kind of weapon you use against him. But now I have shown you how much is at stake for the town, and consequently for me too. And therefore I warn you, Thomas, that I am inexorable in the demand I am about to make of you!

DR. STOCKMANN.

What demand?

BURGOMASTER.

As you have not had the sense to refrain from chattering to outsiders about this delicate business, which should have been kept an official secret, of course it cannot now be hushed up. All sorts of rumours will get abroad, and evil disposed persons will invent all sorts of additions to them. It will therefore be necessary for you publicly to contradict these rumours.

DR. STOCKMANN.

I! How? I don't understand you?

BURGOMASTER.

We expect that, after further investigation, you will come to the conclusion that the affair is not nearly so serious or pressing as you had at first imagined.

• DR. STOCKMANN.

Aha! So you expect that?

BURGOMASTER.

Furthermore, we expect you to express your confidence that the Board of Directors will thoroughly and conscientiously carry out all measures for the remedying of any possible defects.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, but that you'll never be able to do, so long as you go on tinkering and patching. I tell you that, Peter; and it's my deepest, sincerest conviction——

BURGOMASTER.

As an official, you have no right to hold any individual conviction.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Starting.] No right to——?

BURGOMASTER.

As an official, I say. In your private capacity, of course, it is another matter. But as a subordinate official of the Baths, you have no right to express any conviction at issue with that of your superiors

DR. STOCKMANN.

'This is too much! I, a doctor, a man of science, have no right to——!

BURGOMASTER.

The matter in question is not a purely scientific one; it is a complex affair; it has both a technical and an economic side.

DR. STOCKMANN.

What the devil do I care what it is! I will be free to speak my mind upon any subject under the sun!

BURGOMASTER.

As you please—so long as it does not concern the Baths. With them we forbid you to meddle.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Shouts.] You forbid --! You! A set of——

BURGOMASTER.

I forbid it--I, your chief; and when I issue an order, you have simply to obey.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Controlling himself] Upon my word, Peter, if you weren't my brother --

PETRA.

[Tears open the door.] Father, you shan't submit to this!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[Following her.] Petra, Petra!

BURGOMASTER.

Ah! So we have been listening!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

The partition is so thin, we couldn't help --

PETRA.

I stood and listened on purpose.

BURGOMASTER.

Well, on the whole, I am not sorry- --

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Coming nearer to him.] You spoke to me of forbidding and obeying——

BURGOMASTER.

You have forced me to adopt that tone.

DR. STOCKMANN.

And I am to give myself the lie, in a public declaration?

BURGOMASTER.

We consider it absolutely necessary that you should issue a statement in the terms indicated.

DR. STOCKMANN.

And if I do not obey?

BURGOMASTER.

Then we shall ourselves put forth a statement to reassure the public.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Well and good; then I shall write against you. I shall stick to my point and prove that I am right, and you wrong. And what will you do then?

BURGOMASTER.

Then I shall be unable to prevent your dismissal.

DR. STOCKMANN.

What——!

PETRA.

Father! Dismissal!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Dismissal!

BURGOMASTER.

Your dismissal from the Baths. I shall be compelled to move that notice be given you at once, and that you have henceforth no connection whatever with the Baths.

DR. STOCKMANN.

You would dare to do that!

BURGOMASTER.

It is you who are playing the daring game.

PETRA.

Uncle, this is a shameful way to treat a man like father!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Do be quiet, Petra!

BURGOMASTER.

[Looking at PETRA.] Aha! We have opinions of our own already, eh? To be sure, to be sure! [To MRS. STOCKMANN.] Sister-in-law, you are presumably the most rational member of this household. Use all your influence with your husband; try to make him realise what all this will involve both for his family—

DR. STOCKMANN.

My family concerns myself alone!

BURGOMASTER.

——both for his family, I say, and for the town he lives in.

DR. STOCKMANN.

It is I that have the real good of the town at heart! I want to lay bare the evils that, sooner or later, must come to light. Ah! You shall see whether I love my native town.

BURGOMASTER.

You, who, in your blind obstinacy, want to cut off the town's chief source of prosperity!

DR. STOCKMANN.

That source is poisoned, man! Are you mad? We live by trafficking in filth and corruption! The whole of our flourishing social life is rooted in a lie!

BURGOMASTER.

Idle fancies— or worse. The man who scatters broadcast such offensive insinuations against his native place must be an enemy of society.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Going towards him.] You dare to——!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[Throwing herself between them.] Thomas!

PETRA.

[Seizing her father's arm] Keep calm, father!

BURGMASTER.

I will not expose myself to violence. You have had your warning now. Reflect upon what is due to yourself and to your family. Good bye.

[He goes]

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Walking up and down.] And I must put up with such treatment! In my own house, Katrina! What do you say to that!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Indeed it's a shame and a disgrace, Thomas——

PETRA.

Oh, if I could only get hold of uncle——!

DR. STOCKMANN.

It's my own fault. I ought to have stood up against them long ago—to have shown my teeth—and used them too! And to be called an enemy of society! Me! I won't bear it; by Heaven, I won't!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

But, my dear Thomas, after all, your brother has the power——

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, but I have the right.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Ah yes, right, right! What good does it do to have the right, if you haven't any might?

PETRA.

Oh, mother—how can you talk so?

DR. STOCKMANN.

What! No good, in a free community, to have right on your side? What an absurd idea, Katrina! And besides—haven't I the free and independent press before me—and the compact majority at my back? That is might enough, I should think!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Why, good heavens, Thomas! you're surely not thinking of—?

DR. STOCKMANN.

What am I not thinking of?

MRS. STOCKMANN.

———of setting yourself up against your brother, I mean

DR. STOCKMANN.

What the devil would you have me do, if not stick to what is right and true?

PETRA.

Yes, that's what I should like to know?

MRS. STOCKMANN.

But it will be of no earthly use. If they won't, they won't.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Ho-ho, Katrina! just wait a while, and you shall see whether I can fight my battles to the end.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Yes, to the end of getting your dismissal; that is what will happen.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Well then, I shall at any rate have done my duty towards the public, towards society—I who am called an enemy of society!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

But towards your family, Thomas? Towards us at home? Do you think that is doing your duty towards those who are dependent on you?

PETRA.

Oh, mother, don't always think first of us.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Yes, it's easy for you to talk; you can stand alone if need be. But remember the boys, Thomas; and think a little of yourself too, and of me——

DR. STOCKMANN.

You're surely out of your senses, Katrina! If I were to be such a pitiful coward as to knuckle under to this Peter and his confounded crew should I ever have another happy hour in all my life?

MRS. STOCKMANN.

I don't know about that; but God preserve us from the happiness we shall all of us have if you persist in defying them. There you will be again, with nothing to live on, with no regular income. I should have thought we had had enough of that in the old days. Remember them, Thomas; think of what it all means.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Struggling with himself and clenching his hands.]
And this is what these jacks-in-office can bring upon a free and honest man! Isn't it revolting, Katrina?

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Yes, no doubt they are treating you shamefully. But God knows there's plenty of injustice one must just submit to in this world. Here are the boys, Thomas. Look at them! What is to become of them? Oh no, no! you can never have the heart-----

[ELIE and MORTEN, with school books, have meanwhile entered.]

DR. STOCKMANN.

The boys ——! [With a sudden access of firmness and decision.] Never, though the whole earth should crumble, will I bow my neck beneath the yoke.

[Goes towards his room.]

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[Following him.] Thomas—what are you going to do?

DR. STOCKMANN.

[At the door.] I must have the right to look my boys in the face when they have grown into free men.
[Goes into his room.]

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[Bursts into tears.] Ah, God help us all!

PETER.

Father is true to the core! He will never give in!
[The boys ask wonderingly what it all means.
PETER signs to them to be quiet.]

ACT THIRD.

The Editor's Room of the "People's Messenger." In the background, to the left, an entrance door; to the right another door, with glass panes, through which can be seen the composing room. A door in the right hand wall. In the middle of the room a large table covered with papers, newspapers, and books. In front, on the left, a window, and by it a desk with a high stool. A couple of arm chairs beside the table; some other chairs along the walls. The room is dingy and cheerless, the furniture shabby, the arm chairs dirty and torn. In the composing-room are seen a few compositors at work; further back, a hand-press in operation.

[Hovstad is seated at the desk, writing. Presently BILLING enters from the right, with the DOCTOR'S manuscript in his hand.]

BILLING.

Well, I must say --- !

Hovstad.

[Billing.] Have you read it through?

BILLING.

[Laying MS. on the desk] Yes, I should think I had.

HOVSTAD.

Don't you think the Doctor comes out strong?

BILLING.

Strong! Why, strike me dead if he isn't crushing! Every word falls like a—well, like a sledge hammer.

HOVSTAD.

Yes, but these fellows won't collapse at the first blow.

BILLING.

True enough; but we'll keep on hammering away, blow after blow, till the whole officialdom comes crashing down. As I sat in there reading that article, I seemed to hear the revolution thundering afar.

HOVSTAD.

[Turning round.] Sh! Don't let Aslaksen hear that.

BILLING.

[In a lower voice.] Aslaksen's a white-livered, cowardly fellow, without a spark of manhood in him. But this time you'll surely carry your point? Eh? You'll print the Doctor's paper?

HOVSTAD.

Yes, if only the Burgomaster doesn't give in——

BILLING.

That would be deuced annoying.

Hovstad.

Well, whatever happens, fortunately we can turn the situation to account. If the Burgomaster won't agree to the Doctor's proposal, he'll have all the small middle class down upon him - all the House owners' Association, and the rest of them. And if he does agree to it, he'll fall out with the whole crew of big shareholders in the Baths, who have hitherto been his main support — -

BILLING.

Yes, of course; for no doubt they'll have to fork out a lot of money — -

Hovstad.

You may take your oath of that. And then, don't you see, when the ring is broken up, we'll din it into the public day by day that the Burgomaster is incompetent in every respect, and that all responsible positions in the town, the whole municipal government in short, must be entrusted to men of liberal ideas.

BILLING.

Strike me dead if that isn't the square truth! I see it -- I see it: we are on the eve of a revolution!

[A knock at the door.]

Hovstad.

Hush! [Calls.] Come in!

[DR. STOCKMANN enters from the back, left.]

Hovstad.

[Going towards him.] Ah, here is the Doctor. Well?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Print away, Mr. Hovstad!

Hovstad.

So it has come to that?

Billing.

Hurrah!

DR. STOCKMANN.

Print away, I tell you. To be sure it has come to that. Since they will have it so, they must. War is declared, Mr. Billing!

Billing.

War to the knife, say I! War to the death, Doctor!

DR. STOCKMANN.

This article is only the beginning. I have four or five others sketched out in my head already. But where do you keep Aslaksen?

Billing.

[Calling into the printing-room.] Aslaksen! just come here a moment.

Hovstad.

Four or five more articles, eh? On the same subject?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Oh no—not at all, my dear fellow. No; they will deal with quite different matters. But they're all of a piece with the water-works and sewer question. One thing leads to another. It's just like beginning to pick at an old house, don't you know?

BILTING.

Strike me dead, but that's true! You feel you can't leave off till you've pulled the whole lumber-heap to pieces.

ASLAKSEN.

[Enters from the printing to m.] Pulled to pieces! Surely the Doctor isn't thinking of pulling the Baths to pieces?

HOVSTAD.

Not at all. Don't be alarmed.

DR. STOCKMANN.

No, we were talking of something quite different. Well, what do you think of my article, Mr. Hovstad?

HOVSTAD.

I think it's simply a masterpiece.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, isn't it? I'm glad you think so—very glad.

HOVSTAD.

It's so clear and to the point. One doesn't in the least need to be a specialist to understand the gist of it. I am certain every intelligent man will be on your side.

ASLAKSEN.

And all the prudent ones too, I hope?

BILLING.

Both the prudent and imprudent -- in fact, almost the whole town.

ASLAKSEN.

Then I suppose we may venture to print it.

DR. STOCKMANN.

I should think so!

HOVSTAD.

It shall go in to-morrow.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, plague take it, not a day must be lost. Look here, Mr. Aslaksen, this is what I wanted to ask you: won't you take personal charge of the article?

ASLAKSEN.

Certainly I will.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Be as careful as if it were gold. No printers' errors; every word is important. I shall look in again presently; perhaps you'll be able to let me see a proof. — Ah! I can't tell you how I long to have the thing in print—to see it launched —

BILLING.

Yes, like a thunderbolt!

DR. STOCKMANN.

—and submitted to the judgment of every intelligent citizen. Oh, you have no idea what I have had to put up with to-day. I've been threatened with all sorts of things. I was to be robbed of my clearest rights as a human being —

BILLING.

What! Your rights as a human being!

DR. STOCKMANN.

— I was to humble myself, and eat the dust; I was to set my personal interests above my deepest, holiest convictions —

BILLING.

Strike me dead, but that's too outrageous!

HØVSTAD.

Oh, what can you expect from that quarter?

DR. STOCKMANN

But they shall find they were mistaken in me; they shall learn that in black and white, I promise them! I shall throw myself into the breach every day in the Messenger, bombard them with one explosive article after another —

ASLAKSEN

Yes, but look here —

BILLING.

Hurrah! It's war! War!

DR. STOCKMANN.

I shall smite them to the earth, I shall crush them, I shall level their entrenchments to the ground in the eyes of all right-thinking men! That's what I shall do!

ASLAKSEN.

But above all things be temperate, Doctor; bombard with moderation——

BILLING.

Not at all, not at all! Don't spare the dynamite!

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Going on imperturbably.] For now it's no mere question of water-works and sewers, you see. No, the whole community must be purged, disinfected——

BILLING.

There sounds the word of salvation!

DR. STOCKMANN.

All the old bunglers must be sent packing, you understand. And that in every possible department! Such endless vistas have opened out before me to-day. I am not quite clear about everything yet, but I shall see my way presently. It's young and vigorous standard-bearers we must look for, my friends; we must have new captains at all the outposts.

BILLING.

Hear, hear!

DR. STOCKMANN.

And if only we hold together, it will go so smoothly, so smoothly! The whole revolution will glide off the stocks just like a ship. Don't you think so?

HØVSTAD.

For my part, I believe we have now every prospect of placing our municipal affairs in the right hands.

ASLAKSEN.

And if only we proceed with moderation, I really don't think there can be any danger.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Who the devil cares whether there's danger or not! What I do, I do in the name of truth and for conscience's sake.

HØVSTAD.

You are a man to be backed up, Doctor.

ASLAKSEN.

Yes, there's no doubt the Doctor is a true friend to the town; he's what I call a friend of society.

BILLING.

Strike me dead if Dr. Stockmann isn't a Friend of the People, Aslaksen!

ASLAKSEN.

I have no doubt the House owners' Association will soon adopt that expression.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Shaking their hands, deeply moved.] Thanks, thanks, my dear, faithful friends; it does me good to hear you. My respected brother called me something very different. Never mind! Trust me to pay him back with interest! But I must be off now to see a poor devil of a patient. I shall look in again, though. Be sure you look after the article, Mr. Aslaksen; and, whatever you do, don't leave out any of my notes of exclamation! Rather put in a few more! Well, good bye for the present, good-bye, good-bye.

[Mutual salutations while they accompany him to the door. He goes out.]

HOVSTAD.

He will be invaluable to us.

ASLAKSEN.

Yes, so long as he confines himself to this matter of the Baths. But if he goes further, it will scarcely be advisable to follow him.

HOVSTAD.

Hum—that entirely depends on— -

BELLING.

You're always so confoundedly timid, Aslaksen.

ASLAKSEN.

Timid? Yes, when it's a question of attacking local authorities, I am timid, Mr. Billing; I have learnt caution in the school of experience, let me tell you. But start me on the higher politics, confront me with the Government itself, and then see if I'm timid.

BILLING

No, you're not; but that's just where your inconsistency comes in.

ASLAKSEN.

The fact is, I am keenly alive to my responsibilities. If you attack the Government, you at least do society no harm; for the men attacked don't care a straw, you see—they stay where they are all the same. But local authorities can be turned out; and then we might get some incompetent set into power, to the irreparable injury both of house-owners and other people.

HOVSTAD.

But the education of citizens by self-government—do you never think of that?

ASLAKSEN.

When a man has solid interests to protect, he can't think of everything, Mr. Hovstad.

HOVSTAD.

Then I hope I may never have solid interests to protect.

BILLING.

Hear, hear!

ASLAKSEN.

[Smiling.] Hm! [Points to the desk.] Governor Stensgård<sup>1</sup> sat in that editorial chair before you.

BILLING.

[Spitting.] Pooh! A turncoat like that!

HØVSTAD.

I am no weathercock—and never will be.

ASLAKSEN.

A politician should never be too sure of anything on earth, Mr. Høvsstad. And as for you, Mr. Billing, you ought to take in a reef or two, I should say, now that you are applying for the secretaryship to the Town Council.

BILLING.

I——!

HØVSTAD.

Is that so, Billing?

BILLING.

Well, yes—but, deuce take it, you understand, I'm only doing it to spite their high-mightinesses.

<sup>1</sup> It will be remembered that Aslaksen figures in The League of Youth, of which Stensgård is the central character. Stensgård, we see, has justified Landstad's prophecy by attaining the high administrative dignity of "Stiftamtmand," here roughly translated "Governor."

ASLAKSEN.

Well, that has nothing to do with me. But if I am to be accused of cowardice and inconsistency, I should just like to point out this: My political record is open to every one. I have not changed at all, except in becoming more moderate. My heart still belongs to the people; but I don't deny that my reason inclines somewhat towards the authorities - the local ones, I mean.

[Goes into the printing room.]

BILLING.

Don't you think we should try to get rid of him, Hovstad?

HOVSTAD.

Do you know of any one else that will pay for our paper and printing?

BILLING.

What a confounded nuisance it is to have no capital!

HOVSTAD.

[Sitting down by the desk.] Yes, if we only had that —

BILLING.

Suppose you applied to Dr. Stockmann?

HOVSTAD.

[Turning over his papers.] What would be the good? He hasn't a rap.

BILLING.

No; but he has a good man behind him—old Morten Kiil—"The Badger," as they call him.

HOVSTAD.

[Writing.] Are you so sure he has money?

BILLING.

Yes, strike me dead if he hasn't! And part of it must certainly go to Stockmann's family. He's bound to provide for—for the children at any rate.

HOVSTAD.

[Half turning.] Are you counting on that?

BILLING.

Counting? How should I be counting on it?

HOVSTAD.

Best not! And that secretaryship you shouldn't count on either; for I can assure you you won't get it

BILLING.

Do you think I don't know that? A refusal is the very thing I want. Such a rebuff fires the spirit of opposition in you, gives you a fresh supply of gall, as it were; and that's just what you need in a god-forsaken hole like this, where anything really stimulating so seldom happens.

HOVSTAD.

[Writing.] Yes, yes.

BILLING.

Well - they shall soon hear from me!—Now I'll go and write the appeal to the House-owners' Association.

[Goes into the room on the right]

Hovstad.

[Sits at his desk, biting his penholder, and says slowly:] Hm-- so that's the way of it.—[A knock at the door.] Come in.

[Petra enters from the back, left.]

Hovstad.

[Rising.] What! Is it you? Here?

Petra.

Yes; please excuse me—

Hovstad.

[Offering her an arm-chair.] Won't you sit down?

Petra.

No, thanks; I must go again directly.

Hovstad.

Perhaps you bring a message from your father—?

Petra.

No, I have come on my own account. [Takes a book from the pocket of her cloak.] Here is that English story.

Hovstad.

Why have you brought it back?

Petra.

Because I won't translate it.

Hovstad.

But you promised——

Petra.

Yes; but then I hadn't read it. I suppose you have not read it either?

Hovstad.

No; you know I can't read English; but——

Petra.

Exactly; and that's why I wanted to tell you that you must find something else. [Putting the book on the table.] This will never do for the Messenger.

Hovstad.

Why not?

Petra.

Because it flies in the face of all your convictions

Hovstad

Well, for that matter——

Petra.

You don't understand me. It makes out that a supernatural power looks after the so-called good people in this world, and turns everything to their advantage at last; while all the so called bad people are punished.

Hovstad.

Yes, but that's all right. That's the very thing the public like.

Petra.

And would you supply the public with such stuff? You don't believe a word of it yourself. You know well enough that things do not really happen like that.

Hovstad.

Of course not; but an editor can't always do as he likes. He has often to humour people's fancies in minor matters. After all, politics is the chief thing in life—at any rate for a newspaper; and if I want the people to follow me along the path of emancipation and progress, I mustn't scare them away. If they find a moral story like this down in the cellar,<sup>1</sup> they are all the more ready to take in what we tell them above—they feel themselves safer.

Petra.

For shame! You're not such a hypocrite as to set traps like that for your readers. You're not a spider.

<sup>1</sup> The reference is to the continental feuilleton at the foot of the page.

Hovstad.

[Smiling.] Thanks for your good opinion. It's true that the idea is Billing's, not mine.

Petra.

Mr. Billing's !

Hovstad.

Yes, at least he was talking in that strain the other day. It was Billing that was so anxious to get the story into the paper ; I don't even know the book.

Petra.

But how can Mr. Billing, with his advanced views——

Hovstad.

Well, Billing is many-sided. He's applying for the secretaryship to the Town Council, I hear.

Petra.

I don't believe that, Mr. Hovstad. How could he descend to such a thing ?

Hovstad.

That you must ask him.

Petra.

I could never have thought it of Billing !

Hovstad.

[Looking more closely at her.] No ? Is it such a surprise to you ?

PETRA.

Yes. And yet—perhaps not. Oh, I don't know — .

HOVSTAD.

We journalists are not worth much, Miss Petra.

PETRA.

Do you really say that?

HOVSTAD.

I think so, now and then.

PETRA.

Yes, in the little everyday squabbles that I can understand. But now that you have taken up a great cause — —

HOVSTAD.

You mean this affair of your father's?

PETRA.

Of course. I should think you must feel yourself worth more than the general run of people now.

HOVSTAD.

Yes, to-day I do feel something of the sort.

PETRA.

Yes, surely you must. Oh, it's a glorious career you have chosen! To be the pioneer of unrecognised truths and new and daring ways of thought!— even, if that were all, to stand forth fearlessly in support of an injured man——

Hovstad.

Especially when the injured man is—I hardly know how to put it——

Petra.

You mean when he is so upright and true?

Hovstad.

[In a low voice.] I mean—especially when he is your father.

Petra.

[Sudden'y taken aback] That?

Hovstad.

Yes, Petra—Miss Petra.

Petra.

So that is your chief thought, is it? Not the cause itself? Not the truth? Not father's great, warm heart?

Hovstad.

Oh, that too, of course.

Petra.

No thank you; you said too much that time, Mr. Hovstad. Now I shall never trust you again in anything.

Hovstad.

Can you be so hard on me because it's mainly for your sake——?

Petra.

What I blame you for is that you have not acted straightforwardly towards father. You have talked to him as if you cared only for the truth and the good of the community. You have trifled with both father and me. You are not the man you pretended to be. And that I will never forgive you-- never!

Hovstad.

You shouldn't say that so bitterly, Miss Petra-- least of all now.

Petra.

Why not now?

Hovstad.

Because your father cannot do without my help.

Petra.

[Measuring him from head to foot.] So you are capable of that, too? Oh, shame!

Hovstad.

No, no. I spoke without thinking. You mustn't believe that of me.

Petra.

I know what to believe. Good-bye.

[Aslaksen enters from printing-room, hurriedly and mysteriously.]

ASLAKSEN.

What do you think, Mr. Hovstad— [Seeing PETRA ]
Ow, that's awkward——

PETRA.

Well, there is the book. You must give it to some one else.

[Going towards the main door.]

HOVSTAD.

[Following her.] But, Miss Petra——

PETRA.

Good-bye.

[She goes.]

ASLAKSEN.

I say, Mr Hovstad!

HOVSTAD.

Well well; what is it?

ASLAKSEN.

The Burgomaster's out there, in the printing-office.

HOVSTAD.

The Burgomaster?

ASLAKSEN.

Yes. He wants to speak to you; he came in by the back way—he didn't want to be seen, you understand.

HOVSTAD.

What can be the meaning of this? Stop, I'll go myself——

[Goes towards the printing-room, opens the door, looks, and invites the BURGOMASTER to enter.]

HOVSTAD.

Keep a look-out, Aslaksen, that no one——

ASLAKSEN.

I unders'tand.

[Goes into the printing-room.]

BURGOMASTER.

You didn't expect to see me here, Mr. Hovstad.

HOVSTAD.

No, I cannot say that I did.

BURGOMASTER.

[Looking about him.] You are very comfortably installed here—capital quarters.

HOVSTAD.

Oh——

BURGOMASTER.

And here have I come, without with your leave or by your leave, to take up your time——

HOVSTAD.

You are very welcome, Burgomaster; I am at your service. Let me take your cap and stick. [He does so, and puts them on a chair.] And won't you be seated?

BURGOMASTER.

[Sitting down by the table.] Thanks. [HOVSTAD also sits by the table.] I have been much--very much worried to-day, Mr. Hovstad.

HOVSTAD.

Really? Well, I suppose with all your various duties, Burgomaster--

BURGOMASTER.

It's the Doctor that has been causing me annoyance to-day.

HOVSTAD.

Indeed! The Doctor?

BURGOMASTER.

He has written a sort of memorandum to the Directors about some alleged shortcomings in the Baths.

HOVSTAD.

Has he really?

BURGOMASTER.

Yes; hasn't he told you? I thought he said---

HOVSTAD.

Oh yes, by-the bye, he did mention something---

ASLAKSEN.

[From the printing office.] I've just come for the manuscript——

HOVSTAD.

[In a tone of vexation] Oh!—there it is on the desk.

ASLAKSEN.

[Finding it.] All right.

BURGOMASTER.

Why, that's the very thing——

ASLAKSEN.

Yes, this is the Doctor's article, Burgomaster.

HOVSTAD.

Oh, is that what you were speaking of?

BURGOMASTER.

Precisely. What do you think of it?

HOVSTAD.

I have no technical knowledge of the matter, and I've only glanced through it.

BURGOMASTER.

And yet you are going to print it?

HOVSTAD.

I can't very well refuse a signed communication——

ASLAKSEN.

I have nothing to do with the editing of the paper, Burgomaster——

BURGOMASTER.

Of course not.

ASLAKSEN.

I merely print what's placed in my hands.

BURGOMASTER.

Quite right, quite right.

ASLAKSEN.

So I must——

[Goes towards the printing-room.]

BURGOMASTER.

No, stop a moment, Mr. Aslaksen. With your permission, Mr. Hovstad——

HOVSTAD.

By all means, Burgomaster.

BURGOMASTER.

You are a discreet and thoughtful man, Mr. Aslaksen.

ASLAKSEN.

I am glad you think so, Burgomaster.

BURGOMASTER.

And a man of very wide influence.

ASLAKSEN.

Well—chiefly among the lower middle class.

BURGOMASTER.

The small taxpayers form the majority—here as everywhere.

ASLAKSEN.

That's very true.

BURGOMASTER.

And I have no doubt that you know the general feeling among them. Am I right?

ASLAKSEN.

Yes, I think I may say that I do, Burgomaster.

BURGOMASTER.

Well--since our townsfolk of the poorer class appear to be so heroically eager to make sacrifices——

ASLAKSEN.

How so?

HOVSTAD.

Sacrifices?

BURGOMASTER.

It is a pleasing evidence of public spirit—a most pleasing evidence. I admit it is more than I should quite have expected. But, of course, you know public feeling better than I do.

ASLAKSEN.

Yes but, Burgomaster ———

BURGOMASTER.

And assuredly it is no small sacrifice the town will have to make.

HOVSTAD.

The town?

ASLAKSEN.

But I don't understand ——. It's the Baths——!

BURGOMASTER.

At a rough provisional estimate, the alterations the Doctor thinks desirable will come to two or three hundred thousand crowns.

ASLAKSEN.

That's a lot of money; but——

BURGOMASTER.

Of course we shall be obliged to raise a municipal loan

HOVSTAD

[Rising] You surely can't mean that the town——?

ASLAKSEN.

Would you come upon the rates? Upon the scanty savings of the lower middle-class?

BURGOMASTER.

Why, my dear Mr. Aslaksen, where else are the funds to come from?

ASLAKSEN.

The proprietors of the Baths must see to that.

BURGOMASTER.

The proprietors are not in a position to go to any further expense.

ASLAKSEN.

Are you quite sure of that, Burgomaster?

BURGOMASTER.

I have positive information. So if these extensive alterations are called for, the town itself will have to bear the cost.

ASLAKSEN.

Oh, plague take it all—I beg your pardon!—but this is quite another matter, Mr. Hovstad.

HOVSTAD.

Yes, it certainly is.

BURGOMASTER.

The worst of it is, that we shall be obliged to close the establishment for a couple of years.

HOVSTAD.

To close it? Completely?

ASLAKSEN.

For two years!

BURGOMASTER.

Yes, the work will require that time—at least.

ASLAKSEN.

But, damn it all! we can't stand that, Burgomaster. What are we house-owners to live on in the meantime?

BURGOMASTER.

It's extremely difficult to say, Mr. Aslaksen. But what would you have us do? Do you think a single visitor will come here if we go about making them fancy that the water is poisoned, that the place is pestilential, that the whole town——

ASLAKSEN.

And it's all nothing but fancy?

BURGOMASTER.

With the best will in the world, I have failed to convince myself that it is anything else.

ASLAKSEN.

In that case it's simply inexcusable of Dr. Stockmann—I beg your pardon, Burgomaster, but ——

BURGOMASTER.

I'm sorry to say you are only speaking the truth, Mr. Aslaksen. Unfortunately, my brother has always been noted for his rashness.

ASLAKSEN.

And yet you want to back him up in this, Mr. Hovstad!

HOVSTAD.

But who could possibly imagine that-----?

BURGOMASTER.

I have drawn up a short statement of the facts, as they appear from a sober-minded standpoint; and I have intimated that any drawbacks that may possibly exist can no doubt be remedied by measures compatible with the finances of the Baths.

HOVSTAD.

Have you the article with you, Burgomaster?

BURGOMASTER.

[Feeling in his pockets.] Yes; I brought it with me, in case you——

ASLAKSEN.

[Quickly.] Plague take it, there he is!

BURGOMASTER.

Who? My brother?

HOVSTAD.

Where? where?

ASLAKSEN.

He's coming through the composing room.

BURGOMASTER.

Most unfortunate ! I don't want to meet him here, and yet there are several things I want to talk to you about.

HOVSTAD.

[Pointing to the door on the right.] Go in there for a moment.

BURGOMASTER.

But——?

HOVSTAD.

You'll find nobody but Billing there.

ASLAKSEN.

Quick, quick, Burgomaster, he's just coming.

BURGOMASTER.

Very well, then. But try to get rid of him quickly.
[He goes out by the door on the right, which ASLAKSEN opens, and closes behind him.]

HOVSTAD.

Pretend to be busy, Aslaksen.
[He sits down and writes. ASLAKSEN turns over a heap of newspapers on a chair, right.]

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Entering from the composing-room.] Here I am, back again. [Puts down his hat and stick.]

Hovstad.

[Writing.] Already, Doctor? Make haste with what we were speaking of, Aslaksen. We've no time to lose to-day.

Dr. Stockmann.

[To Aslaksen.] No proof yet, I hear.

Aslaksen.

[Without turning round.] No; how could you expect it?

Dr. Stockmann.

Of course not; but you understand my impatience. I can have no rest or peace until I see the thing in print.

Hovstad.

Hm; it will take a good while yet. Don't you think so, Aslaksen?

Aslaksen.

I'm afraid it will.

Dr. Stockmann.

All right, all right, my good friends; then I shall look in again. I'll look in twice if necessary. With so much at stake—the welfare of the whole town—one mustn't grudge a little trouble. [Is on the point of going, but stops and comes back.] Oh, by the way—there's one other thing I must speak to you about.

Hovstad.

Excuse me; wouldn't some other time——?

DR. STOCKMANN.

I can tell you in two words. You see it's this: when people read my article in the paper to-morrow, and find I have spent the whole winter working quietly for the good of the town——

HOVSTAD.

Yes but, Doctor——

DR. STOCKMANN.

I know what you're going to say. You don't think it was a bit more than my duty— my simple duty as a citizen. Of course I know that, as well as you do. But you see, my fellow townsmen—good Lord! the poor souls think so much of me——

ASLAKSEN.

Yes, the townspeople have hitherto thought very highly of you, Doctor.

DR. STOCKMANN.

That's exactly why I'm afraid that—. What I wanted to say was this: when all this comes to them—especially to the poorer classes—as a summons to take the affairs of the town into their own hands for the future——

HOVSTAD.

[Rising.] Hm, Doctor, I won't conceal from you——

DR. STOCKMANN.

Aha! I thought there was something brewing!

But I won't hear of it. If they are getting up anything of that sort —

Hovstad.

Of what sort?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Well, anything of any sort—a procession with banners, or a banquet, or a subscription for a testimonial, or whatever it may be—you must give me your solemn promise to put a stop to it. And you too, Mr. Aslaksen; do you hear?

Hovstad.

Excuse me, Doctor; we may as well tell you the whole truth first as last —

[MRS. STOCKMANN enters from the back, left.]

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[Seeing the Doctor.] Ah! just as I thought!

Hovstad.

[Going towards her.] Mrs. Stockmann, too?

DR. STOCKMANN.

What the devil do you want here, Katrina?

MRS. STOCKMANN.

You know very well what I want.

Hovstad.

Won't you sit down? Or perhaps——

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Thanks; please don't trouble. And you must forgive my following my husband here; remember, I am the mother of three children.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Stuff and nonsense! We all know that well enough.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Well, it doesn't look as if you thought very much about your wife and children to-day, or you wouldn't be so ready to plunge us all into ruin.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Are you quite mad, Katrina! Has a man with a wife and children no right to proclaim the truth? Has he no right to be an active and useful citizen? Has he no right to do his duty by the town he lives in?

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Everything in moderation, Thomas!

ASLAKSEN.

That's just what I say. Moderation in everything.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

You are doing us a great wrong, Mr. Hovstad, in enticing my husband away from house and home, and befooling him in this way.

HOVSTAD.

I am not befooling any one——

DR. STOCKMANN.

Befooling      Do you think I should let myself be befooled?

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Yes, that's just what you do. I know very well that you are the cleverest man in the town; but you're very easily made a fool of, Thomas. [To HOVSTAD.] Remember that he loses his post at the Baths if you print what he has written——

ASLAKSEN.

What!

HOVSTAD.

Well now, really, Doctor——

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Laughing.] Ha ha! just let them try—! No no, my dear, they'll think twice about that. I have the compact majority behind me, you see!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

That's just the misfortune, that you should have such a horrid thing behind you.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Nonsense, Katrina;—you go home and look after your house, and let me take care of society. How can you be in such a fright when you see me so confident and happy? [Rubbing his hands and walking up and down.] Truth and the People must win the day; you may be perfectly sure of that. Oh!

I can see all our free-souled citizens standing shoulder to shoulder like a conquering army——!
 [Stopping by a chair.] Why—what the devil is that?

ASLAKSEN.

[Looking at it.] Oh Lord!

HOVSTAD.

[The same.] Hm—

DR. STOCKMANN.

Why, here's the top-knot of authority!

[He takes the BURGOMASTER'S official cap carefully between the tips of his fingers and holds it up.]

MRS. STOCKMANN.

The Burgomaster's cap!

DR. STOCKMANN.

And here's the staff of office, too! But how in the devil's name did they——?

HOVSTAD.

Well then——

DR. STOCKMANN.

Ah, I understand! He has been here to talk you over. Ha ha! He reckoned without his host that time! And when he caught sight of me in the printing-room—[Bursts out laughing—he took to his heels, eh, Mr. Aslaksen?

ASLAKSEN.

[Hurriedly.] Exactly; he took to his heels, Doctor.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Made off without his stick and --. No, that won't do! Peter never left anything behind him. But where the devil have you stowed him? Ah—in here, of course. Now you shall see, Katrina!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Thomas—I implore you— !

ASLAKSEN.

Take care, Doctor!

[DR. STOCKMANN has put on the BURGOMASTER'S cap and grasped his stick; he now goes up to the door, throws it open, and makes a military salute.]

[The BURGOMASTER enters, red with anger. Behind him comes BILLING.]

BURGOMASTER.

What is the meaning of these antics?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Respect, my good Peter! Now, it's I that am in power in this town.

[He struts up and down.]

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[Almost in tears.] Oh, Thomas—— !

BURGOMASTER.

[Following him.] Give me my cap and stick!

DR. STOCKMANN.

[As before.] You may be Chief of Police, but I am Burgomaster. I am master of the whole town, I tell you!

BURGOMASTER.

Put down my cap, I say. Remember it is an official cap, as by law prescribed!

DR. STOCKMANN.

Pshaw! Do you think the awakening lion of the democracy will let itself be scared by a gold-laced cap? There's to be a revolution in the town to-morrow, let me tell you. You threatened me with dismissal; but now I dismiss you—dismiss you from all your offices of trust—. You think I can't do it?—Oh yes, I can! I have the irresistible forces of society on my side. Hovstad and Billing will thunder in the People's Messenger, and As'aksen will take the field at the head of the whole House-owners' Association——

AS'AKSEN.

No, Doctor, I shall not.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Why, of course you will——

BURGOMASTER.

Aha! Perhaps Mr. Hovstad would like to join the agitation after all?

Hovstad.

No, Burgomaster.

Aslaksen.

No, Mr. Hovstad isn't such a fool as to ruin both himself and the paper for the sake of a delusion.

Dr. Stockmann.

[Looking about him.] What does all this mean?

Hovstad.

You have presented your case in a false light, Doctor; therefore I am unable to give you my support.

Billing.

And after what the Burgomaster has been so kind as to explain to me, I——

Dr. Stockmann.

In a false light! Well, I am responsible for that. Just you print my article, and I promise you I shall prove it up to the hilt.

Hovstad.

I shall not print it. I cannot. and will not, and dare not print it.

Dr. Stockmann.

You dare not? What nonsense is this? You are editor; and I suppose it's the editor that controls a paper.

ASLAKSEN.

No, it's the subscribers, Doctor.

BURGOMASTER.

Fortunately.

ASLAKSEN.

It's public opinion, the enlightened majority, the house-owners and all the rest. It's they who control a paper.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Calmly.] And all these powers I have against me?

ASLAKSEN.

Yes, you have. It would mean absolute ruin for the town if your article were inserted.

DR. STOCKMANN.

So that's the way of it!

BURGOMASTER.

My hat and stick!

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Takes off the cap and lays it on the table along with the stick.]

BURGOMASTER.

[Taking them both.] Your term of office has come to an untimely end.

DR. STOCKMANN.

The end is not yet. [To HOVSTAD.] So you are quite determined not to print my paper in the Messenger?

Hovstad.

Quite; for the sake of your family, if for no other reason.

Mrs. Stockmann.

Oh, be kind enough to leave his family out of the question, Mr. Hovstad.

Burgomaster.

[Takes a manuscript from his pocket.] When this appears, the public will be in possession of all necessary information; it is an authentic statement. I place it in your hands.

Hovstad.

[Taking the MS.] Good. It shall appear in due course.

Dr. Stockmann.

And not mine! You imagine you can kill me and the truth by a conspiracy of silence! But it won't be so easy as you think. Mr. Aslaksen, will you be good enough to print my article at once, as a pamphlet? I'll pay for it myself, and be my own publisher. I'll have four hundred copies—no, five—six hundred.

Aslaksen.

No. If you offered me its weight in gold, I dare not lend my press to such a purpose, Doctor. I daren't fly in the face of public opinion. You won't get it printed anywhere in the whole town.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Then give it me back.

HOVSTAD.

[Handing him the MS.] By all means.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Taking up his hat and cane.] It shall be made public all the same. I shall read it at a great mass meeting; all my fellow-citizens shall hear the voice of truth!

BURGOMASTER.

Not a single society in the town would let you their hall for such a purpose.

ASLAKSEN.

Not one, I'm quite certain.

BILLING.

No, strike me dead if they would!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

That would be too disgraceful! Why do they turn against you like this, every one of them?

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Irritated.] I'll tell you why. It's because in this town all the men are old women - like you. They all think of nothing but their families, not of the general good.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[Taking his arm.] Then I'll show them that an — an old woman can be a man, for once in a way. For now I'll stand by you, Thomas!

DR. STOCKMANN.

Bravely said, Katrina! I swear by my soul and conscience the truth shall out! If they won't let me a hall, I'll hire a drum and march through the town with it; and I'll read my paper at every street corner.

BURGMASLER.

You can scarcely be such a raving lunatic as that?

DR. STOCKMANN.

I am.

ASLAKSEN.

You would not get a single man in the whole town to go with you.

BILLING.

No, strike me dead if you would!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Don't give in, Thomas. I'll ask the boys to go with you.

DR. STOCKMANN.

That's a splendid idea!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Morten will be delighted; and Eilif will go too, I daresay.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, and so will Petra! And you yourself, Katrina!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

No no, not I. But I'll stand at the window and watch you - that I will.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Throwing his arms about her and kissing her.] Thank you for that! Now, my good sirs, we're ready for the fight! Now we shall see whether your despicable tactics can stop the mouth of the patriot who wants to purge society!

[He and his wife go out together by the door in the back, left.]

BURGMASTER.

[Shaking his head dubiously.] Now he has turned her head too!

ACT FOURTH.

A large old-fashioned room in CAPTAIN HORSTER'S house. An open folding door in the background leads to an anteroom. In the wall on the left are three windows. About the middle of the opposite wall is a platform, and on it a small table, two candles, a water-bottle and glass, and a bell. For the rest, the room is lighted by sconces placed between the windows. In front, on the left, is a table with a candle on it, and by it a chair. In front, to the right, a door, and near it a few chairs.

[Large assemblage of all classes of townsfolk. In the crowd are a few women and schoolboys. More and more people gradually stream in from the back until the room is quite full.]

FIRST CITIZEN.

[To another standing near him.] So you're here too, Iamstad?

SECOND CITIZEN.

I never miss a public meeting.

A BYSTANDER.

I suppose you've brought your whistle?

SECOND CITIZEN.

Of course I have; haven't you?

THIRD CITIZEN.

I should think so. And Skipper Evensen said he'd bring a thumping big horn.

SECOND CITIZEN.

He's a good 'un, is Evensen!

[Laughter in the group.]

A FOURTH CITIZEN.

[Joining them.] I say, what's it all about? What's going on here to-night?

SECOND CITIZEN.

Why, it's Dr. Stockmann that's going to lecture against the Burgomaster.

FOURTH CITIZEN.

But the Burgomaster's his brother.

FIRST CITIZEN.

That makes no difference. Dr. Stockmann's not afraid of him.

THIRD CITIZEN.

But he's all wrong; the People's Messenger says so.

SECOND CITIZEN.

Yes, he must be wrong this time; for neither the House-owners' Association nor the Citizens' Club would let him have a hall.

FIRST CITIZEN.

They wouldn't even lend him the hall at the Baths.

SECOND CITIZEN.

No, you may be sure they wouldn't.

A MAN.

[In another group.] Now, who's the one to follow in this business, eh?

ANOTHER MAN.

[In the same group.] Just keep your eye on Aslaksen, and do as he does.

BILLING.

[With a writing-case under his arm, makes his way through the crowd.] Excuse me, gentlemen. Will you allow me to pass? I'm here to report for the People's Messenger. Many thanks.

[Sits by the table on the left.]

A WORKING-MAN.

Who's he?

ANOTHER WORKING-MAN.

Don't you know him? It's that fellow Billing, that writes for Aslaksen's paper.

[CAPTAIN HORSTER enters by the door in front on the right, escorting MRS. STOCKMANN and PETRA. EILIF and MORTEN follow them.]

HORSTER.

This is where I thought you might sit; you can so easily slip out if anything should happen.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Do you think there will be any disturbance?

HORSTER.

One can never tell with such a crowd. But there's no occasion for anxiety.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[Sitting down.] How kind it was of you to offer Stockmann this room.

HORSTER.

Since no one else would, I——

PETRA.

[Who has also seated herself.] And it was brave too, Captain Horster.

HORSTER.

Oh, I don't see where the bravery comes in.

[Hovsrød and Aslaksen enter at the same moment, but make their way through the crowd separately.]

ASLAKSEN.

[Going up to HORSTER.] Hasn't the Doctor come yet?

HORSFEL.

He's waiting in there.

[A movement at the door in the background.]

HOVSTAD.

[To BILLING.] There's the Burgomaster! Look!

BILLING.

Yes, strike me dead if he hasn't put in an appearance after all!

[BURGOMASTER STOCKMANN makes his way blandly through the meeting, bowing politely to both sides, and takes his stand by the wall on the left. Soon afterwards, DR. STOCKMANN enters by the door on the right. He wears a black frock-coat and white necktie. Faint applause, met by a subdued hissing. Then silence.]

DR. STOCKMANN.

[In a low tone.] How do you feel, Katrina?

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Quite comfortable, thank you. [In a low voice.] Now do keep your temper, Thomas.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Oh, I shall keep myself well in hand. [Looks at his watch, ascends the platform, and bows.] It's a quarter past the hour, so I shall begin——

[Takes out his MS.]

ASLAKSEN.

But surely a chairman must be elected first.

DR. STOCKMANN.

No ; that's not at all necessary.

SEVERAL GENTLEMEN.

[Shouting.] Yes, yes.

BURGOMASTER.

I should certainly say that a chairman ought to be elected.

DR. STOCKMANN.

But I've called this meeting to give a lecture, Peter !

BURGOMASTER.

Dr. Stockmann's lecture may possibly lead to differences of opinion.

• SEVERAL VOICES IN THE CROWD.

A chairman ! a chairman !

•
HOVSTAD

The general voice of the meeting seems to be for a chairman !

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Controlling himself.] Very well then ; let the meeting have its way.

ASLAKSEN.

Will not the Burgomaster take the chair ?

THREE GENTLEMEN.

[Clapping.] Bravo! Bravo!

BURGMASITER.

For reasons you will easily understand, I must decline. But, fortunately, we have among us one whom I think we can all accept. I allude to the president of the House owners' Association, Mr. Aslaksen.

MANY VOICES.

Yes, yes! Bravo, Aslaksen! Hurray for Aslaksen!

[DR. STOCKMANN takes his MS. and descends from the platform.]

ASLAKSEN.

Since my fellow citizens repose this trust in me, I cannot refuse——

[Applause and cheers. ASLAKSEN ascends the platform.]

BELLING.

[Writing] So——“Mr. Aslaksen was elected by acclamation —”

ASLAKSEN.

And now, as I have been called to the chair, I take the liberty of saying a few brief words. I am a quiet, peace-loving man; I am in favour of discreet moderation, and of—and of moderate discretion. Every one who knows me, knows that.

MANY VOICES.

Yes, yes, Aslaksen !

ASLAKSEN.

I have learnt in the school of life and of experience that moderation is the virtue in which the individual citizen finds his best advantage——

BURGOMASTER.

Hear, hear !

ASLAKSEN.

——and it is discretion and moderation, too, that best serve the community. I would therefore suggest to our respected fellow-citizen, who has called this meeting, that he should endeavour to keep within the bounds of moderation.

A MAN.

[By the door.] Three cheers for the Temperance Society !

A VOICE.

Go to the devil !

VOICES.

Hush ! hush !

ASLAKSEN.

No interruptions, gentlemen ! --Does any one wish to offer any observations ?

BURGOMASTER.

Mr. Chairman !

ASLAKSEN.

Burgomaster Stockmann will address the meeting.

BURGOMASTER.

On account of my close relationship—of which you are probably aware— to the present medical officer of the Baths, I should have preferred not to speak here this evening. But my position as chairman of the Baths, and my care for the vital interests of this town, force me to move a resolution. I may doubtless assume that not a single citizen here present thinks it desirable that untrustworthy and exaggerated statements should get abroad as to the sanitary condition of the Baths and of our town.

MANY VOICES.

No, no, no! Certainly not! We protest!

BURGOMASTER.

I therefore beg to move, "That this meeting declines to hear the proposed lecture or speech on the subject by the medical officer of the Baths."

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Flaring up.] Declines to hear —! What do you mean?

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[Coughing.] Hm! hm!

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Controlling himself.] So I am not to be heard?

BURGOMASTER.

In my statement in the People's Messenger I have made the public acquainted with the essential facts, so that all well-disposed citizens can easily form their own judgment. From that statement it will be seen that the medical officer's proposal—besides amounting to a vote of censure upon the leading men of the town—at bottom only means saddling the ratepayers with an unnecessary outlay of at least a hundred thousand crowns.

[Sounds of protest and some hissing.]

ASLAKSEN.

[Ringing the bell.] Order, gentlemen! I must beg leave to support the Burgomaster's resolution. I quite agree with him that there is something beneath the surface of the Doctor's agitation. In all his talk about the Baths, it is really a revolution he is aiming at; he wants to effect a redistribution of power. No one doubts the excellence of Dr. Stockmann's intentions—of course there cannot be two opinions as to that. I, too, am in favour of self-government by the people, if only it doesn't cost the ratepayers too much. But in this case it would do so; and therefore I'll be hanged if—excuse me—in short, I cannot go with Dr. Stockmann upon this occasion. You can buy even gold too dear; that's my opinion.

[Loud applause on all sides.]

HOVSTAD.

I, too, feel bound to explain my attitude. Dr. Stockmann's agitation seemed at first to find favour in several quarters, and I supported it as impartially as I could. But it presently appeared that we had been misled by a false representation of the facts —

DR. STOCKMANN.

False——!

HOVSTAD.

Well then, an untrustworthy representation. This the Burgomaster's report has proved. I trust no one here present doubts my liberal principles; the attitude of the Messenger on all great political questions is well known to you all. But I have learned from men of judgment and experience that in purely local matters a paper must observe a certain amount of caution

ASLAKSEN.

I entirely agree with the speaker.

HOVSTAD.

And in the matter under discussion it is quite evident that Dr. Stockmann has public opinion against him. But, gentlemen, what is an editor's clearest and most imperative duty? Is it not to work in harmony with his readers? Has he not in some sort received a tacit mandate to further assiduously and unweariedly the interests of his constituents? Or am I mistaken in this?

MANY VOICES.

No, no no! Hovstad is right!

HOVSTAD.

It has cost me a bitter struggle to break with a man in whose house I have of late been a frequent guest with a man who, up to this day, has enjoyed the unqualified goodwill of his fellow citizens—with a man whose only, or, at any rate, whose chief fault is that he consults his heart rather than his head.

A FEW SCATTERED VOICES.

That's true! Hurray for Dr. Stockmann!

HØVSTAD.

But my duty towards the community has constrained me to break with him. Then, too, there is another consideration that impels me to oppose him, and, if possible, to bar the ill-omened path upon which he is entering: consideration for his family——

DR. STOCKMANN.

Keep to the water-works and sewers!

HØVSTAD.

—— consideration for his wife and his unprotected<sup>1</sup> children.

MORTEN.

Is that us, mother?

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Hush!

ASTAKSEN.

I will now put the Burgomaster's resolution to the vote.

<sup>1</sup> Literally, "unprovided-for."

DR. STOCKMANN.

You need not. I have no intention of saying anything this evening of all the filth at the Baths. No! You shall hear something quite different.

BURGOMASTER.

[Half aloud.] What next, I wonder?

A DRUNKEN MAN.

[At the main entrance.] I'm a ratepayer, so I've a right to my opinion! And it's my full, firm, in comprehensible opinion that-----

SEVERAL VOICES.

Silence up there!

OTHERS. .

He's drunk! Turn him out!

[The drunken man is turned out.]

DR. STOCKMANN. .

Can I speak?

ASLAKSEN.

[Ring the bell.] Dr. Stockmann will address the meeting.

DR. STOCKMANN.

A few days ago, I should have liked to see any one venture upon such an attempt to gag me as has been made here to-night! I would have fought like a lion for my sacred rights ! But now I care little enough ; for now I have more important things to speak of.

[ *The people crowd closer round him. MORTEN
KILL comes in sight among the bystanders.* ]

DR. STOCKMANN.

[ Continuing. ] I have been pondering a great many things during these last days—thinking such a multitude of thoughts, that at last my head was positively in a whirl.

BURGOMASTER.

[ Coughing. ] Hm !

DR. STOCKMANN.

But presently things seemed to straighten themselves out, and I saw them clearly in all their bearings.
That is why I stand here this evening. I am about to make great revelations, my fellow citizens ! I am going to announce to you a far-reaching discovery, beside which the trifling fact that our water-works are poisoned, and that our health-resort is built on pestilential ground, sinks into insignificance.

• MANY VOICES.

[ Shouting. ] Don't speak about the Baths ! We won't listen to that ! No more of that !

DR. STOCKMANN.

I have said I would speak of the great discovery I have made within the last few days—the discovery that all our sources of spiritual life are poisoned, and that our whole society rests upon a pestilential basis of falsehood.

SEVERAL VOICES.

[In astonishment and half aloud] What's he saying?

BURGOMASTER.

Such an insinuation——!

ASLAKSEN.

[With his hand on the bell.] I must call upon the speaker to moderate his expressions.

DR. STOCKMANN.

I have loved my native town as dearly as any man can love the home of his childhood. I was young when I left our town, and distance, home sickness, and memory threw, as it were, a glamour over the place and its people.

[Some applause and cries of approval.]

DR. STOCKMANN.

Then for years I was imprisoned in a horrible hole, far away in the north. As I went about among the people scattered here and there over the stony wilderness, it seemed to me, many a time, that it would have been better for these poor famishing creatures to have had a cattle-doctor to attend them, instead of a man like me.

[Murmurs in the room]

BILLING.

[Laying down his pen.] Strike me dead if I've ever heard——!

HOFSTAD.

What an insult to an estimable peasantry!

DR. STOCKMANN.

Wait a moment!—! don't think any one can reproach me with forgetting my native town up there. I sat brooding like an eider-duck, and what I hatched was the plan of the Baths.

[Applause and expressions of dissent.]

DR. STOCKMANN.

And when, at last, fate ordered things so happily that I could come home again then, fellow-citizens, it seemed to me that I hadn't another desire in the world. Yes, one desire I had: an eager, constant, burning desire to be of service to my birthplace, and to its people.

BURGOMASTER.

[Giving into vacancy.] A strange method to select—! •

• DR. STOCKMANN.

So I went about revelling in my happy illusions. But yesterday morning—no, it was really two nights ago—my mind's eyes were opened wide, and the first thing I saw was the colossal stupidity of the authorities—

[Noise, cries, and laughter. MRS. STOCKMANN coughs repeatedly.]

BURGOMASTER.

Mr. Chairman!

ASLAKSEN.

[Ringing his bell.] In virtue of my position ---!

DR. STOCKMANN.

It's petty to catch me up on a word, Mr. Aslaksen! I only mean that I became alive to the extraordinary muddle our leading men had been guilty of, down at the Baths. I cannot for the life of me abide leading men—I've seen enough of them in my time. They are like goats in a young plantation: they do harm at every point; they block the path of a free man wherever he turns—and I should be glad if we could exterminate them like other noxious animals---

[Uproar in the room.]

BURGOMASTER.

Mr. Chairman, are such expressions permissible?

ASLAKSEN.

[With his hand on the bell] Doctor Stockmann ---!

DR. STOCKMANN.

I can't conceive how it is that I have only now seen through these gentry; for haven't I had a magnificent example before my eyes here every day—my brother Peter—slow of understanding, tenacious in prejudice---

[Laughter, noise, and whistling. MRS. STOCKMANN coughs. ASLAKSEN rings violently.]

THE DRUNKEN MAN.

[Who has come in again.] Is it me you're alluding to? Sure enough, my name's Petersen; but devil take me if ---

ANGRY VOICES.

Out with that drunken man! Turn him out!
[The man is again turned out.]

BURGOMASTER.

Who is that person?

A BYSTANDER.

I don't know him, Burgomaster

ANOTHER.

He doesn't belong to the town

A THIRD.

I believe he's a timber-dealer from---
[The rest is inaudible]

• ASLAKSEN.

The man was evidently intoxicated. --Continue, Dr. Stockmann*; but pray endeavour to be moderate

DR. STOCKMANN.

Well, fellow citizens, I shall say no more about our leading men. If any one imagines, from what I have just said, that it's these gentlemen I want to make short work of to-night, he is mistaken altogether mistaken. For I cherish the comfortable conviction that these laggards, these relics of a decaying order of thought, are diligently cutting their own throats.

They need no doctor to hasten their end. And it is not people of that sort that constitute the real danger to society; it is not they who are most active in poisoning the sources of our spiritual life and making a plague-spot of the ground beneath our feet; it is not they who are the most dangerous enemies of truth and freedom in our society.

CRIES FROM ALL SIDES.

Who, then? Who is it? Name, name!

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, you may be sure I shall name them! For this is the great discovery I made yesterday: [In a louder tone.] The most dangerous foe to truth and freedom in our midst is the compact majority. Yes, it's the confounded, compact, liberal majority—that, and nothing else! There, I've told you.

[Immense disturbance in the room. Most of the audience are shouting, stamping, and whistling. Several elderly gentlemen exchange furtive glances and seem to be enjoying the scene. MRS. STOCKMANN rises in alarm. EILIF and MORTEN advance threateningly towards the school-boys, who are making noises. ASLAKSEN rings the bell and calls for order. HOVSTAD and BILLING both speak, but nothing can be heard. At last quiet is restored.]

ASLAKSEN.

I must request the speaker to withdraw his ill-considered expressions.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Never, Mr. Aslaksen! For it's this very majority that robs me of my freedom, and wants to forbid me to speak the truth.

HOVSTAD.

The majority always has right on its side.

BILLING.

Yes, and truth too, strike me dead!

DR. STOCKMANN.

The majority never has right on its side. Never, I say! That is one of the social lies that a free, thinking man is bound to rebel against. Who make up the majority in any given country? Is it the wise men or the fools? I think we must agree that the fools are in a terrible, overwhelming majority, all the wide world over. But how in the devil's name can it ever be right for the fools to rule over the wise men?

[Uproar and yells.]

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes yes, you can shout me down, but you cannot gain-say me. The majority has might—unhappily—but right it has not. It is I, and the few, the individuals, that are in the right. The minority is always right.

[Renewed uproar.]

HOVSTAD.

Ha ha! Dr. Stockmann has turned aristocrat since the day before yesterday!

DR. STOCKMANN.

I have said that I have no words to waste on the little, narrow chested, short-winded crew that lie in our wake. Pulsating life has nothing more to do with them. I am speaking of the few, the individuals among us, who have made all the new, germinating truths their own. These men stand, as it were, at the outposts, so far in the van that the compact majority has not yet reached them--and there they fight for truths that are too lately born into the world's consciousness to have won over the majority.

Hovstad.

So the Doctor's a revolutionist now!

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, by Heaven, I am, Mr. Hovstad! I am going to revolt against the lie that truth belongs exclusively to the majority. What sort of truths do the majority rally round? Truths so stricken in years that they are sinking into decrepitude. When a truth is so old as that, gentlemen, it's in a fair way to become a lie.

[Laughter and jeers.]

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes yes, you may believe me or not, as you please; but truths are by no means the wiry Methusalehs some people think them. A normally-constituted truth lives--let us say as a rule, seventeen or eighteen years; at the outside twenty; very seldom more. And truths so patriarchal as that are always shockingly emaciated; yet it's not till then that the majority takes them up and recommends them to society as wholesome food. I can assure you there's not much nutriment in that sort of fare; you may take my word as a doctor for that. All these majority truths are like last year's salt pork; they're like rancid, mouldy ham, producing all the moral scurvy that devastates society.

ASLAKSEN.

It seems to me that the honourable speaker is wandering rather far from the subject.

BURGOMASTER.

I beg to endorse the Chairman's remark.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Why you're surely mad, Peter! I'm keeping as closely to my text as I possibly can: for my text is precisely this, that the masses, the majority, this devil's-own compact majority—it's that, I say, that's poisoning the sources of our spiritual life, and making a plague-spot of the ground beneath our feet.

• HOVSTAD

And you make this charge against the great, independent majority, just because they have the sense to accept only certain and acknowledged truths? •

DR. STOCKMANN

Ah, my dear Mr. Hovstad, don't talk about certain truths! The truths acknowledged by the masses, the multitude, were certain truths to the vanguard in our grandfathers' days. We, the vanguard of to-day, don't acknowledge them any longer; and I don't believe there exists any other certain truth but this - that no society can live a healthy life upon truths so old and marrowless.

Hovstad.

But instead of all this vague talk, suppose you were to give us some specimens of these old marrowless truths that we are living upon.

[Approval from several quarters ]

Dr. Stockmann.

Oh, I could give you no end of samples from the rubbish heap; but, for the present, I shall keep to one acknowledged truth, which is a hideous lie at bottom, but which Mr. Hovstad, and the Messenger, and all adherents of the Messenger, live on all the same.

Hovstad.

And that is— —?

Dr. Stockmann.

That is the doctrine you have inherited from your forefathers, and go on thoughtlessly proclaiming far and wide—the doctrine that the multitude, the vulgar herd, the masses, are the pith of the people—that they are the people—that the common man, the ignorant, undeveloped member of society, has the same right to sanction and to condemn, to counsel and to govern, as the intellectually distinguished few.

Billing.

Well, now, strike me dead—!

Hovstad.

[Shouting at the same time.] Citizens, please note this!

ANGRY VOICES.

Ho ho! Aren't we the people? Is it only the grand folks that are to govern?

A WORKING MAN.

Out with the fellow that talks like that!

OTHERS.

Turn him out!

A CITIZEN.

[Shouting.] Blow your horn, Evensen.
[The deep notes of a horn are heard; whistling, and terrific noise in the room.]

DR. STOCKMANN.

[When the noise has somewhat subsided.] Now do be reasonable! Can't you bear even for once in a way to hear the voice of truth? I don't ask you all to agree with me on the instant. But I certainly should have expected Mr. Hovstad to back me up, as soon as he had collected himself a bit. Mr. Hovstad sets up to be a freethinker - -

SEVERAL VOICES.

[Subdued and wondering.] Freethinker, did he say? What? Mr. Hovstad a freethinker?

Hovstad.

[Shouting.] Prove it, Dr. Stockmann! When have I said so in print?

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Reflecting.] No, upon my soul you're right there; you've never had the frankness to do that. Well, well, I won't put you on the rack, Mr. Hovstad. Let me be the freethinker then. And now I'll make it clear to you all, and on scientific grounds too, that the Messenger is leading you shamefully by the nose, when it tells you that you, the masses, the crowd, are the true pith of the people. I tell you that's only a newspaper lie. The masses are nothing but the raw material that must be fashioned into a People.

[Murmurs, laughter, and disturbance in the room.]

DR. STOCKMANN.

Is it not so with all other living creatures? What a difference between a cultivated and an uncultivated breed of animals! Just look at a common barn-door hen. What meat do you get from such a skinny carcase? Not much, I can tell you! And what sort of eggs does she lay? A decent crow or raven can lay nearly as good. Then take a cultivated Spanish or Japanese hen, or take a fine pheasant or turkey—ah! then you'll see the difference! And now look at the dog, our near relation. Think first of an ordinary vulgar cur—I mean one of those wretched, ragged, plebeian mongrels that haunt the gutters, and soil the side-walks. Then place such a mongrel by the side of a poodle-dog, descended through many generations from an aristocratic stock, who have lived on delicate food, and heard harmonious voices and music. Do you think the brain of the poodle isn't very differently developed from that of the mongrel? Yes, you may be sure it is! It's well-bred poodle-pups like this that jugglers train to perform the most marvellous tricks. A common peasant-cur could never learn anything of the sort— not if he tried till doomsday.

[Noise and laughter are heard all round.]

A CITIZEN.

[Shouting.] Do you want to make dogs of us now?

ANOTHER MAN.

We're not animals, Doctor!

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, on my soul, but we are animals, my good sir! We're one and all of us animals, whether we like it or not. But truly there are few enough aristocratic animals among us. Oh, there's a terrible difference between poodle-men and mongrel-men! And the ridiculous part of it is, that Mr. Hovstad quite agrees with me so long as it's four-legged animals we're talking of —

HOVSTAD.

Oh, beasts are only beasts.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Well and good — but no sooner do I apply the law to two-legged animals, than Mr. Hovstad stops short; then he daren't hold his own opinions, or think out his own thoughts; then he turns the whole principle upside-down, and proclaims in the People's Messenger that the barn-door hen and the gutter mongrel are precisely the finest specimens in the menagerie. But that's always the way, so long as the commonness still lingers in your system, and you haven't worked your way up to spiritual distinction.

Hovstad.

I make no pretence to any sort of distinction. I come of simple peasant folk, and I am proud that my root should lie deep down among the common people, who are here being insulted.

WORKMEN.

Hurrah for Hovstad! Hurrah! hurrah!

DR. STOCKMANN.

The sort of common people I am speaking of are not found among the lower classes alone; they crawl and swarm all around us—up to the very summits of society. Just look at your own smug, respectable Burgomaster! Why, my brother Peter belongs as clearly to the common people as any man that walks on two legs.

[Laughter and hisses.]

BURGOMASTER.

I protest against such personalities.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Imperturbably.] —and that not because, like myself, he's descended from a good-for-nothing old pirate from Pomerania, or thereabouts—for that's our ancestry---

BURGOMASTER.

An absurd tradition! Utterly groundless.

DR. STOCKMANN.

---but he is so because he thinks the thoughts and holds the opinions of his official superiors. Men who do that belong, intellectually-speaking, to the common people; and that is why my distinguished brother Peter is at bottom so undistinguished,—and consequently so illiberal.

BURGOMASTER.

Mr. Chairman -- !

Hovstad.

So that the distinguished people in this country are the Liberals? That's quite a new light on the subject. [Laughter.]

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, that is part of my new discovery. And this, too, follows: that liberality of thought is almost precisely the same thing as morality. Therefore I say it's absolutely unpardonable of the Messenger to proclaim, day out, day in, the false doctrine that it's the masses, the multitude, the compact majority, that monopolise liberality and morality,—and that vice and corruption and all sorts of spiritual uncleanness ooze out of culture—as all that filth oozes down to the Baths from the Mill Dale tan works!

[Noise and interruptions.]

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Goes on imperturbably, smiling in his eagerness.]
And yet this same Messenger can preach about elevating the masses and the multitude to a higher level of well being! Why, deuce take it, if the Messenger's own doctrine holds good, the elevation of the masses would simply mean hurling them straight to perdition! But, happily, the notion that culture demoralises is nothing but an old traditional lie. No, it's stupidity, poverty, the ugliness of life, that do the devil's work! In a house that isn't aired and swept every day—my wife maintains that the floors ought to be scrubbed too, but perhaps that is going too far;—well, in such a house, I say, within two or three years, people lose the power of thinking or acting morally. Lack of oxygen enervates the conscience. And there seems to be precious little oxygen in many and many a house in this town, since the whole compact majority is unscrupulous enough to want to found its future upon a quagmire of lies and fraud.

ASLAKSEN.

I cannot allow so gross an insult to be levelled against a whole community.

A GENTLEMAN.

I move that the Chairman order the speaker to sit down.

EAGER VOICES.

Yes, yes! That's right! Sit down! Sit down!

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Flaring up.] Then I shall proclaim the truth at every street corner! I shall write to newspapers in other towns! The whole country shall know how matters stand here!

HOVSTAD.

It almost seems as if the Doctor's object were to ruin the town.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, so well do I love my native town that I would rather ruin it than see it flourishing upon a lie.

ASLAKSEN.

That's plain speaking.

[Noise and whistling. MRS. STOCKMANN coughs in vain; the DOCTOR no longer heeds her.]

HOVSTAD.

[Shouting amid the tumult.] The man who would ruin a whole community must be an enemy to his fellow citizens!

DR. STOCKMANN.

[With growing excitement.] What does it matter if a lying community is ruined! Let it be levelled to the ground, say I! All men who live upon a lie ought to be exterminated like vermin! You'll end by poisoning the whole country; you'll bring it to such a pass that the whole country will deserve to perish. And if it ever comes to that, I shall say, from the bottom of my heart: Perish the country! Perish all its people!

A MAN.

[In the crowd.] Why, he talks like a regular enemy of the people!

BILLING.

Strike me dead but there spoke the people's voice!

THE WHOLE ASSEMBLY.

[Shouting.] Yes! yes! yes! He's an enemy of the people! He hates his country! He hates the whole people!

ASLAKSEN.

Both as a citizen of this town and as a human being, I am deeply shocked at what it has been my lot to hear to night. Dr. Stockmann has unmasked himself in a manner I should never have dreamt of. I must reluctantly subscribe to the opinion just expressed by some estimable citizens; and I think we ought to formulate this opinion in a resolution. I therefore beg to move, "That this meeting declares the medical officer of the Baths, Dr. Thomas Stockmann, to be an enemy of the people."

[Thunders of applause and cheers. Many form a circle round the DOCTOR and hoot at him. MRS. STOCKMANN and PETRA have risen. MORTEN and EILIF fight the other school-boys, who have also been hooting. Some grown up persons separate them]

DR. STOCKMANN.

[To the people looking.] Ah, fools that you are! I tell you that——

ASLAKSEN.

[Ring.] The Doctor is out of order in speaking. A formal vote must be taken; but out of consideration for personal feelings, it will be taken in writing and without names. Have you any blank paper, Mr. Billing?

BILLING.

Here's both blue and white paper——

ASLAKSEN.

Capital; that will save time. Cut it up into slips. That's it. [To the meeting.] Blue means no, white means aye. I myself will go round and collect the votes.

[The BURGOMASTER leaves the room. ASLAKSEN and a few others go round with pieces of paper in hats.]

A GENTLEMAN.

[To Hovstad.] What can be the matter with the Doctor? What does it all mean?

HOVSTAD.

Why, you know what a hare-brained creature he is.

ANOTHER GENTLEMAN.

[To BILLING.] I say, you're often at his house. Have you ever noticed if the fellow drinks?

BILLING.

Strike me dead if I know what to say. The toddy's always on the table when any one looks in.

A THIRD GENTLEMAN.

No, I should rather say he went off his head at times.

FIRST GENTLEMAN.

I wonder if there's madness in the family?

BILLING.

I shouldn't be surprised.

A FOURTH GENTLEMAN.

No, it's pure malice. He wants to be revenged for something or other.

BILLING.

He was certainly talking about a rise in his salary the other day; but he didn't get it.

ALL THE GENTLEMEN.

[Together.] Aha! That explains everything.

THE DRUNKEN MAN.

[In the crowd.] I want a blue one, I do! And I'll have a white one too.

SEVERAL PEOPLE.

There's the tipsy man again! Turn him out!

MORTEN KIL.

[Approaching the DOCTOR.] Well, Stockmann, you see now what such monkey tricks lead to?

DR. STOCKMANN.

I have done my duty.

MORTEN KIL.

What was that you said about the Mill Dale tanneries?

DR. STOCKMANN.

You heard what I said—that all the filth comes from them.

MORTEN KIL.

From my tannery as well?

DR. STOCKMANN.

I'm sorry to say yours is the worst of all.

MORTEN KIL.

Are you going to put that in the papers too?

DR. STOCKMANN.

I can't gloze anything over.

MORTEN KIL.

This may cost you dear, Stockmann!

[He goes out.]

A FAT GENTLEMAN.

[Goes up to HORSTER, without bowing to the ladies.]
Well, Captain, so you lend your house to enemies of the people?

HORSTER.

I suppose I can do as I please with my own property, Sir.

THE GENTLEMAN.

Then of course you can have no objection if I follow your example?

HORSTER.

What do you mean, Sir?

THE GENTLEMAN.

You shall hear from me to-morrow.
[Turns away and goes out]

PETRA.

Wasn't that the owner of your ship, Captain Horster?

HORSTER.

Yes, that was Mr. Vik

ASLAKSEN.

[With the voting-papers in his hands, ascends the platform and rings.] Gentlemen! I have now to announce the result of the vote. All the voters, with one exception——

A YOUNG GENTLEMAN.

That's the tipsy man!

ASLAKSEN.

With the exception of one intoxicated person, this meeting of citizens unanimously declares the medical officer of the Baths, Dr. Thomas Stockmann, to be an enemy of the people. [Cheers and applause.] Three cheers for our fine old municipality! [Cheers.] Three cheers for our able and energetic Burgomaster, who has so loyally set family prejudice aside! [Cheers.] The meeting is dissolved. [He descends.]

BILLING.

Three cheers for the Chairman!

ALL.

Hurrah for Aslaksen!

DR. STOCKMANN.

My hat and coat, Petra! Captain, have you room for passengers to the new world?

HORSTER.

For you and yours, Doctor, we'll make room.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[While PETRA helps him to put on his coat.] Good! Come, Katrina! come, boys!
[He gives his wife his arm.]

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[In a low voice] Thomas, dear, let us go out by the back way.

DR. STOCKMANN.

No back ways, Katrina! [In a loud voice.] You shall hear from the enemy of the people, before he shakes the dust from his feet! I am not so forbearing as a certain person; I don't say: I forgive you, for you know not what you do.

ASLAKSEN.

[Shouts] That is a blasphemous comparison, Dr. Stockmann!

BILLING.

Strike me——! This is more than a serious man can stand!

A COARSE VOICE.

And he threatens us into the bargain!

ANGRY CRIES.

Let's smash his windows! Duck him in the fiord!

A MAN.

[In the crowd.] Blow your horn, Evensen! Blow man, blow!

[Horn-blowing, whistling, and wild shouting.
The DOCTOR, with his family, goes towards the door. HORSTER clears the way for them.]

ALL.

[Yelling after them as they go out.] Enemy of the people! Enemy of the people! Enemy of the people!

BILLING.

Strike me dead if I'd care to drink toddy at Stockmann's to night!

[The people throng towards the door; the shouting is taken up by others outside; from the street are heard cries of "Enemy of the people! Enemy of the people!"]

ACT FIFTH.

DR. STOCKMANN'S Study. Bookshelves and glass cases with various collections along the walls. In the back, a door leading to the hall; in front, on the left, a door to the sitting-room. In the wall to the right are two windows, all the panes of which are smashed. In the middle of the room is the DOCTOR'S writing-table, covered with books and papers. The room is in disorder. It is forenoon.

[DR. STOCKMANN, in dressing-gown, slippers, and skull-cap, is bending down and raking with an umbrella under one of the cabinets; at last he rakes out a stone.]

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Speaking through the sitting-room doorway.]
Katrina, I've found another!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[In the sitting-room.] Oh, I'm sure you'll find plenty more.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Placing the stone on a pile of others on the table.]
I shall keep these stones as sacred relics. Eilif and Morten shall see them every day, and when I die they shall be heirlooms. [Raking under the bookcase.] Hasn't—what the devil is her name?—the girl—hasn't she been for the glazier yet?

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[Coming in.] Yes, but he said he didn't know whether he would be able to come to-day.

DR. STOCKMANN.

I believe, if the truth were told, he daren't come.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Well, Randina, too, had an idea he was afraid to come, because of the neighbours [Speaks through the sitting room doorway.] What is it, Randina? Very well. [Goes out, and returns immediately.] Here's a letter for you, Thomas.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Let me see. [Opens the letter and reads.] Aha!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Who is it from?

DR. STOCKMANN.

From the landlord. He gives us notice.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Is it possible? He is such a nice man —

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Looking at the letter.] He daren't do otherwise, he says. He is very unwilling to do it; but he daren't do otherwise—on account of his fellow-citizens—out of respect for public opinion—is in a dependent position—doesn't dare to offend certain influential men——

MRS. STOCKMANN.

There, you see, Thomas.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes yes, I see well enough; they are all cowards, every one of them, in this town; no one dares do anything for fear of all the rest. [Throws the letter on the table] But it's all the same to us, Katrina. We'll shape our course for the new world, and then——

MRS. STOCKMANN.

But are you sure this idea of going abroad is altogether wise, Thomas?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Would you have me stay here, where they have pilloried me as an enemy of the people, branded me, smashed my windows! And look here, Katrina, they've torn a hole in my black trousers, too.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Oh dear; and these are the best you have!

DR. STOCKMANN.

A man should never put on his best trousers when he goes out to battle for freedom and truth. Well, I don't care so much about the trousers; them you can always patch up for 'me. But that the mob, the rabble, should dare to attack me as if they were my equals—that's what I can't, for the life of me, stomach!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Yes, they have behaved abominably to you here, Thomas; but is that any reason for leaving the country altogether?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Do you think the plebeians aren't just as insolent in other towns? Oh yes, they are, my dear; it's six of one and half a dozen of the other. Well, never mind, let the curs yelp; that's not the worst; the worst is that every one, all over the country, is the slave of his party. Not that I suppose—very likely it's no better in the free West either; the compact majority, and enlightened public opinion, and all the other devil's trash is rampant there too. But you see the conditions are larger there than here; they may kill you, but they don't slow-torture you; they don't screw up a free soul in a vice, as they do at home here. And then, if need be, you can keep out of it all. [Walks up and down.] If I only knew of any primeval forest, or a little South Sea island to be sold cheap——

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Yes, but the boys, Thomas.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Comes to a standstill.] What an extraordinary woman you are, Katrina! Would you rather have the boys grow up in such a society as ours? Why, you could see for yourself yesterday evening that one half of the population is stark mad, and if the other half hasn't lost its wits, that's only because they're brute beasts who haven't any wits to lose.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

But really, my dear Thomas, you do say such imprudent things.

DR. STOCKMANN.

What! Isn't it the truth that I tell them? Don't they turn all ideas upside down? Don't they stir up right and wrong into one hotch-potch? Don't they call lies everything that I know to be the truth? But the maddest thing of all is to see crowds of grown men, calling themselves Liberals, go about persuading themselves and others that they are friends of freedom! Did you ever hear anything like it, Katrina?

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Yes, yes, no doubt it's all wrong together. But --- [PETRA enters from the sitting-room.]

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Back from school already?

PETRA.

Yes; I've been dismissed.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Dismissed?

DR. STOCKMANN.

You too!

PETRA.

Mrs. Busk gave me notice, and so I thought it best to leave there and then.

DR. STOCKMANN.

You did perfectly right!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Who could have thought Mrs. Busk was such a bad woman!

PETRA.

Oh mother, Mrs. Busk isn't bad at all; I saw clearly how sorry she was. But she dared not do otherwise, she said; and so I am dismissed.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Laughing and rubbing his hands.] She dared not do otherwise just like the rest! Oh, it's delicious.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Oh well, after that frightful scene last night——

PETRA.

It wasn't only that. What do you think, father——?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Well?

PETRA.

Mrs. Busk showed me no fewer than three letters she had received this morning —

DR. STOCKMANN.

Anonymous, of course?

PETRA.

Yes.

DR. STOCKMANN.

They never dare give their names, Katrina!

PETRA.

And two of them stated that a gentleman who is often at our house said at the club — I might that I held extremely advanced opinions upon various things——

DR. STOCKMANN.

Of course you didn't deny it.

PETRA.

Of course not. You know Mrs. Busk herself is pretty advanced in her opinions when we're alone together; but now that this has come out about me, she dared not keep me on.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Some one that's often at our house, too! There, you see, Thomas, what comes of all your hospitality.

DR. STOCKMANN.

We won't live any longer in such a pig-sty! Pack up as quickly as you can, Katrina; let's get away - the sooner the better.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Hush! I think there's some one in the passage. See who it is, Petra.

PETRA.

[Opening the door] Oh, is it you, Captain Horster? Please come in.

HORSTER.

[From the hall] Good morning. I thought I must just look in and ask how you are.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Shaking his head] Thanks; that's very good of you.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

And thank you for helping us through the crowd last night, Captain Horster.

PETRA.

How did you ever get home again?

HORSTER.

Oh, that was all right. I am tolerably able-bodied, you know; and those fellows' bark is worse than their bite.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, isn't it extraordinary, this piggish cowardice? Come here, and let me show you something! Look, here are all the stones they threw in at us. Only look at them ! Upon my soul there aren't more than two decent-sized lumps in the whole heap ; the rest are nothing but pebbles - mere gravel. They stood down there, and yelled, and swore they'd half kill me : —but as for really doing it -no, there's mighty little fear of that in this town !

Horsier.

You may thank your stars for that this time, Doctor.

DR. STOCKMANN.

So I do, of course. But it's depressing all the same; for if ever it should come to a serious national struggle, you may be sure public opinion would be for taking to its heels, and the comp<sup>er</sup> would scamper for their lives like a flock of sheep, Captain Horster. That is what's so melancholy to think of; it grieves me to the heart.—But deuce take it—it's foolish of me to feel anything of the sort! They have called me an enemy of the people; well then, let me be an enemy of the people!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

That you'll never be, Thomas.

DR. STOCKMANN.

You'd better not take your oath of it, Katrina. A bad name may act like a pin-scratch in the lung. And that confounded word--I can't get rid of it; it has sunk deep into my heart; and there it lies gnawing and sucking like an acid. And no magnesia can cure me.

PETRA.

Pooh; you should only laugh at them, father.

HORSTER.

People will think differently yet, Doctor.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Yes, Thomas, that's as certain as that you are standing here.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, perhaps, when it is too late. Well, as they make their bed so they must lie! Let them go on wallowing here in their pig-sty, and learn to repent having driven a patriot into exile. When do you sail, Captain Horster?

HORSTER.

Well that's really what I came to speak to you about——

DR. STOCKMANN.

What? Anything wrong with the ship?

HORSTER.

No; but the fact is, I shan't be sailing in her.

PETRA.

Surely you've not been dismissed?

HORSTER.

[Smiling.] Yes, I have.

PETER.

You too !

MRS. STOCKMANN.

There, you see, Thomas.

DR. STOCKMANN.

And for the truth's sake ! Oh, if I could possibly have imagined such a thing——

HORSTER.

You mustn't be troubled about this; I shall soon find a berth with some other company, elsewhere.

DR. STOCKMANN.

And this is that man Vik ! A wealthy man, independent of every one ! Faugh !

HORSTER.

Oh, for that matter, he's a very well-meaning man. He said himself he would gladly have kept me on if only he dared ——

DR. STOCKMANN.

But he didn't dare ? Of course not !

HORSTER.

It's not so easy, he said, when you belong to a party——

DR. STOCKMANN.

My gentleman has hit it there ! A party is like a sausage-machine; it grinds all the brains together in one mash; and that's why we see nothing but porridge-heads and pulp-heads all around!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Now really, Thomas!

PETRA.

[To HORSTER.] If only you hadn't seen us home, perhaps it would not have come to this.

HORSTER.

I don't regret it.

PETRA.

[Gives him her hand.] Thank you for that!

HORSTER.

[To DR. STOCKMANN.] And then, too, I wanted to tell you this: if you are really determined to go abroad, I've thought of another way— —

DR. STOCKMANN.

'That's good'—if only we can get off quickly —

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Hush! Isn't that a knock?

PETRA.

I believe it is uncle.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Aha! • [Calls.] Come in!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

My dear Thomas, now do promise me——

[The BURGOMASTER enters from the hall.]

BURGOMASTER.

[In the doorway.] Oh, you are engaged. Then I'd better——

DR. STOCKMANN.

No no; come in.

BURGOMASTER.

But I wanted to speak to you alone.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

We can go into the sitting room.

HORSTER.

And I shall look in again presently.

DR. STOCKMANN.

No no; go with the ladies, Captain Horster; I must hear more about——

HORSTER.

All right, then I'll wait.

[He follows MRS. STOCKMANN and PETRA into the sitting room. The BURGOMASTER says nothing, but casts glances at the windows.]

DR. STOCKMANN.

I daresay you find it rather draughty here to day? Put on your cap.

BURGOMASTER.

Thanks, if I may. [Does so.] I fancy I caught cold yesterday evening. I stood there shivering—

DR. STOCKMANN.

Really? On my soul, now, I found it quite warm enough.

BURGOMASTER.

I regret that it was not in my power to prevent these nocturnal excesses.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Have you anything else in particular to say to me?

•      BURGOMASTER.

[Producing a large letter.] I have this document for you from the Directors of the Baths.

DR. STOCKMANN.

My dismissal?

BURGOMASTER.

Yes; dated from to day. [Places the letter on the table.] We are very sorry—but, frankly, we dared not do otherwise on account of public opinion.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Smiling.] Dared not? I've heard that phrase already to day.

BURGOMASTER.

I beg you to realise your position clearly. For the future, you cannot count upon any sort of practice in the town.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Devil take the practice! But how can you be so sure of that?

BURGOMASTER.

'The House owners' Association is sending round a circular from house to house, in which all well-disposed citizens are called upon not to employ you; and I dare swear that not a single head of a family will venture to refuse his signature; he simply dare not.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Well well; I don't doubt that. But what then?

BURGOMASTER.

If I might advise, I would suggest that you should leave the town for a time—

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, I've had some such idea in my mind already.

BURGOMASTER.

Good. And when you have had six months or so for mature deliberation, if you could make up your mind to acknowledge your error, with a few words of regret——

DR. STOCKMANN.

I might perhaps be reinstated, you think?

BURGMASTER.

Perhaps; it's not quite out of the question.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, but how about public opinion? You daren't, on account of public opinion.

BURGMASTER.

Opinion is extremely variable. And, to speak candidly, it is of the greatest importance for us to have such an admission under your own hand.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, I daresay it would be mightily convenient for you! But you remember what I've said to you before about 'such foxes' tricks!

BURGMASTER.

At that time your position was infinitely more favourable; at that time you thought you had the whole town at your back——

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, and now I have the whole town on my back—— [Flaring up.] But no—not if I had the devil and his dam on my back—! Never—never, I tell you!

BURGMAS-TER.

The father of a family has no right<sup>1</sup> to act as you are doing. You have no right to do it, Thomas.

DR. STOCKMANN.

I have no right! There's only one thing in the world that a free man has no right to do; and do you know what that is?

BURGMAS-TER.

No.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Of course not; but I will tell you. A free man has no right to wallow in filth like a cur; he has no right to act so that he ought to spit in his own face!

BURGMAS-TER.

That sounds extremely plausible; and if there were not another explanation of your obstinacy—but we all know there is --

DR. STOCKMANN.

What do you mean by that?

BURGMAS-TER.

You understand well enough. But as your brother, and as a man who knows the world, I warn you not to build too confidently upon prospects and expectations that may very likely come to nothing.

<sup>1</sup> "Has no right" represents the Norwegian "tor ikke"—the phrase which, elsewhere in this scene, is translated "dare not." The latter rendering should perhaps have been adhered to throughout; but in this passage the Norwegian words convey a shade of meaning which is best represented by "has no right."

DR. STOCKMANN.

Why, what on earth are you driving at?

BURGMASER.

Do you really want me to believe that you are ignorant of the terms of old Morten Kiil's will?

DR. STOCKMANN.

I know that the little he has is to go to a home for old and needy citizens. But what has that got to do with me?

BURGMASER.

To begin with, "the little he has" is no trifle. Morten Kiil is a tolerably wealthy man.

DR. STOCKMANN.

I have never had the least notion of that —!

BURGMASER.

Hum --really? Then I suppose you have no notion that a not inconsiderable part of his fortune is to go to your children, you and your wife having a life-interest in it. Has he not told you that?

DR. STOCKMANN.

No, I'll be hanged if he has! On the contrary, he has done nothing but grumble about being so preposterously over-taxed. But are you really sure of this, Peter?

BURGOMASTER.

I have it from a thoroughly trustworthy source.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Why, good heavens, then Katrina's provided for — and the children too! Oh, I must tell her—— [Calls] Katrina, Katrina!

BURGOMASTER.

[Holding him back.] Hush! don't say anything about it yet.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[Opening the door.] What is it?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Nothing, my dear; go in again.

[MRS. STOCKMANN closes the door.]

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Pacing up and down.] Provided for! Only think — all of them provided for! And for life! After all, it's a grand thing to feel yourself secure!

BURGOMASTER.

Yes, but that is just what you are not. Morten Kiil can revoke his will any day or hour he chooses.

DR. STOCKMANN.

But he won't, my good Peter. The Badger is only too delighted to see me fall foul of you and your wife's friends.

BURGMASER.

[Starts and looks searchingly at him] Aha! That throws a new light on a good many things.

DR. STOCKMANN.

What things?

BURGMASER.

So the whole affair has been a carefully-concocted intrigue. Your recklessly violent onslaught in the name of truth upon the leading men of the town

DR. STOCKMANN.

Well, what of it?

BURGMASER.

It was nothing but a preconcerted requital for that vindictive old Morten Kild's will.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Almost speechless.] Peter you are the most abominable plebeian I have ever known in all my born days.

BURGMASER.

All is over between us. Your dismissal is irrevocable for now we have a weapon against you.

[He goes out.]

DR. STOCKMANN.

Shame! shame! shame! [Calls.] Katrina! The floor must be scrubbed after him! Tell her to come here with a pail—what's her name? confound it!—the girl with the smudge on her nose——

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[In the sitting-room doorway] Hush, hush!
Thomas!

PETRA.

[Also in the doorway.] Father, here's grandfather;
he wants to know if he can speak to you alone.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, of course he can. [By the door.] Come in,
father-in-law.

[MORTEN KIL enters. DR. STOCKMANN closes the door behind him.]

DR. STOCKMANN.

Well, what is it? Sit down.

MORTEN KIL.

I won't sit down. [Looking about him.] It looks cheerful here to-day, Stockmann.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, don't you think so?

MORTEN KIL.

Sure enough. And you've plenty of fresh air too; you've got your fill of that oxygen you were talking about yesterday. You must have a rare good conscience to day, I should think.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, I have.

MORTEN KIL.

So I should suppose. [Tapping himself on the breast.] But do you know what I have got here?

DR. STOCKMANN.

A good conscience too, I hope.

MORTEN KIL.

Pooh! No; something far better than that.

[Takes out a large pocket-book, opens it, and shows STOCKMANN a bundle of papers.]

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Looking at him in astonishment.] Shares in the Baths!

MORTEN KIL.

They weren't difficult to get to-day.

DR. STOCKMANN.

And you've gone and bought these up——?

MORTEN KIL.

All I had the money to pay for.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Why, my dear sir,—just when things are in such a desperate way at the Baths——

MORTEN KIL.

If you behave like a reasonable being, you can soon set the Baths all right again.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Well, you can see for yourself I'm doing all I can.
But the people of this town are mad!

MORTEN KIL.

You said yesterday that the worst filth came from my tannery. Now, if that's true, then my grandfather, and my father before me, and I myself, have for ever so many years been poisoning the town with filth, like three destroying angels. Do you think I'm going to sit quiet under such a reproach?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Unfortunately, you can't help it.

MORTEN KIL.

No, thank you. I hold fast to my good name. I've heard that people call me "the Badger." A badger's a sort of a pig, I know; but I'm determined to give them the lie. I will live and die a clean man.

DR. STOCKMANN.

And how will you manage that?

MORTEN KIL.

You shall make me clean, Stockmann.

DR. STOCKMANN.

I!

MORTEN KIL.

Do you know what money I've used to buy these shares with? No, you can't know; but now I'll tell you. It's the money Katrina and Petra and the boys are to have after my death. For, you see, I've laid by something after all.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Flaring up.] And you've taken Katrina's money and done this with it!

MORTEN KIL.

Yes; the whole of it is invested in the Baths now. And now I want to see if you're really so stark, staring mad, after all, Stockmann. If you go on making out that these beasts and other abominations dribble down from my tannery, it'll be just as if you were to flay broad stripes of Katrina's skin—and Petra's too, and the boys. No decent father would ever do that—unless he were a madman.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Walking up and down.] Yes, but I am a madman; I am a madman!

MORTEN KIL.

You surely can't be so raving, ramping mad where your wife and children are concerned.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Stopping in front of him.] Why couldn't you have spoken to me before you went and bought all that rubbish?

MORTEN KIL.

What's done can't be undone.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Walking restlessly about.] If only I weren't so certain about the affair——! But I am absolutely convinced that I'm right.

MORTEN KILL.

[Weighing the pocket-book in his hand.] If you stick to this lunacy, these aren't worth much.

[Puts the book into his pocket.]

DR. STOCKMANN.

But, deuce take it! surely science ought to be able to hit upon some antidote, some sort of prophylactic——

MORTEN KILL.

Do you mean something to kill the beasts?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, or at least to make them harmless.

MORTEN KILL.

Couldn't you try rat's-bane?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Oh, nonsense, nonsense!— But since every one declares it's nothing but fancy, why fancy let it be! Let them have it their own way! Haven't the ignorant, narrow-hearted curs reviled me as an enemy of the people?—and weren't they on the point of tearing the clothes off my back?

MORTEN KIL.

And they've smashed all your windows for you too!

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, and then there's one's duty to one's family! I must talk that over with Katrina; such things are more in her line.

MORTEN KIL.

That's right! You just follow the advice of a sensible woman.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Turning upon him angrily.] How could you act so preposterously! Risking Katrina's money, and putting me to this horrible torture! When I look at you, I seem to see the devil himself--!

MORTEN KIL.

'Then I'd better be off. But I must hear from you, yes or no, by two o'clock. If it's NO, all the shares go to the Hospital—and that this very day.

DR. STOCKMANN.

And what will Katrina get?

MORTEN KIL.

Not a rap.

[The door of the anteroom opens. HOVSTAD and ASLAKSEN are seen outside it.]

MORTEN KIL.

Hullo! look at these two.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Staring at them.] What! Do you actually venture to come here!

HOVSTAD.

Why, to be sure we do.

ASLAKSEN.

You see, we've something to discuss with you.

MORTEN KIL.

[Whispers.] Yes or no — by two o'clock.

ASLAKSEN.

[With a glance at HOVSTAD.] Aha!

[MORTEN KIL goes out.]

DR. STOCKMANN.

Well, what do you want with me? Be brief.

HOVSTAD.

I can quite understand that you resent our attitude at the meeting yesterday——

DR. STOCKMANN.

Your attitude, you say? Yes, it was a pretty attitude! I call it the attitude of cowards--of old women —— Shame upon you!

HOVSTAD.

Call it what you will; but we could not act otherwise.

DR. STOCKMANN.

You dared not, I suppose? Isn't that so?

HOVSTAD.

Yes, if you like to put it so.

ASLAKSEN.

But why didn't you just say a word to us beforehand? The merest hint to Mr. Hovstad or to me——

DR. STOCKMANN.

A hint? What about?

ASLAKSEN.

About what was really behind it all.

DR. STOCKMANN.

I don't in the least understand you.

ASLAKSEN.

[Nods confidentially.] Oh yes, you do, Dr. Stockmann.

HOVSTAD.

It's no good making a mystery of it any longer.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Looking from one to the other.] Why, what in the devil's name——!

ASLAKSEN.

May I ask—isn't your father-in-law going about the town buying up all the Bath stock?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, he has been buying Bath stock to-day; but——

ASLAKSEN.

It would have been more prudent to let somebody else do that—some one not so closely connected with you.

HOVSTAD.

And then you ought not to have appeared in the matter under your own name. No one need have known that the attack on the Baths came from you. You should have taken me into your counsels, Dr. Stockmann.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Stares straight in front of him; a light seems to break in upon him, and he says as though thunder-struck.] Is this possible? Can such things be?

ASLAKSEN.

[Smiling.] It's plain enough that' they can. But they ought to be managed delicately, you understand.

HOVSTAD.

And there ought to be more people in it; for the responsibility always falls more lightly when there are several to share it.

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Calmly.] In one word, gentlemen -what is it you want?

ASLAKSEN.

Mr Hovstad can best——

HOVSTAD.

No, you explain, Aslaksen.

ASLAKSEN.

Well, it's this: now that we know how the matter really stands, we believe we can venture to place the People's Messenger at your disposal.

DR. STOCKMANN.

You can venture to now, eh? But how about public opinion? Aren't you afraid of bringing down a storm upon us?

HOVSTAD.

We must manage to ride out the storm.

ASLAKSEN.

And you must be ready to put about quickly, Doctor. As soon as your attack has done its work——

DR. STOCKMANN.

As soon as my father-in-law and I have bought up the shares at a discount, you mean——?

HOVSTAD.

I presume it is mainly on scientific grounds that you want to take the management of the Baths into your own hands.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Of course; it was on scientific grounds that I got the old Badger to stand in with me. And then we'll tinker up the water works a little, and potter about a bit down at the beach, without its costing the town sixpence. That ought to do the business? Eh?

Hovstad.

I think so—if you have the Messenger to back you up.

Aslaksen.

In a free community the press is a power, Doctor.

Dr. Stockmann.

Yes indeed; and so is public opinion. And you, Mr. Aslaksen—I suppose you will answer for the House-owners' Association?

Aslaksen.

Both for the House owners' Association and the Temperance Society. You may make your mind easy.

Dr. Stockmann.

But gentlemen—really I'm quite ashamed to mention such a thing—but—what return——?

Hovstad.

Of course, we should prefer to give you our support for nothing. But the Messenger is not very firmly established; it's not getting on as it ought to; and I should be very sorry to have to stop the paper just now, when there's so much to be done in general politics.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Naturally; that would be very hard for a friend of the people like you. [Flaring up] But I—I am an enemy of the people! [Striding about the room] Where's my stick? Where the devil is my stick?

HOVSTAD.

What do you mean?

ASLAKSEN.

Surely you wouldn't —

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Standing still.] And suppose I don't give you a single farthing out of all my shares? You must remember we rich folk don't like parting with our money.

HOVSTAD.

And you must remember that this business of the shares can be represented in two ways.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, you are the man for that; if I don't come to the rescue of the Messenger, you'll manage to put a vile complexion on the affair; you'll hunt me down, I suppose—bait me—try to throttle me as a dog throttles a hare!

HOVSTAD.

That's a law of nature—every animal fights for its own subsistence.

ASLAKSEN.

And must take its food where it can find it, you know.

DR. STOCKMANN.

'Then see if you can't find some out in the gutter; [Striding about the room] for now, by heaven! we shall see which is the strongest animal of us three. [Finds his umbrella and brandishes it.] Now, look here— —!

HOVSTAD.

You surely don't mean to assault us!

ASLAKSEN.

I say, be careful with that umbrella!

DR. STOCKMANN.

Out at the window with you, Mr Hovstad!

HOVSTAD.

[By the anteroom door.] Are you utterly crazy?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Out at the window, Mr. Aslaksen! Jump, I tell you! Be quick about it!

ASLAKSEN.

[Running round the writing table.] Moderation, Doctor; I'm not at all strong; I can't stand much—[Screams.] Help! help!

[MRS. STOCKMANN, PETRA, and HORSTER enter from sitting-room.]

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Good heavens, Thomas! what can be the matter?

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Brandishing the umbrella.] Jump, I tell you! Out into the gutter!

HOVSTAD.

An unprovoked assault! I call you to witness, Captain Horster.

[Rushes off through the hall.]

ASLAKSEN.

[Bewildered.] If one only knew the local situation---! <sup>1</sup>

[He slinks out by the sitting room door.]

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[Holding back the DOCTOR.] Now, do restrain yourself, Thomas!

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Throwing down the umbrella.] I'll be hanged if they haven't got off after all.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Why what can they have wanted with you?

<sup>1</sup> "De lokale forhold"---the local conditions, or the circumstances of the locality, a phrase constantly in Aslaksen's mouth in The League of Youth. In the present context it is about equivalent to "the lie of the land."

DR. STOCKMANN.

I'll tell you afterwards; I have other things to think of now. [Goes to the table and writes on a visiting-card.] Look here, Katrina, what's written here?

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Three big NOES; what does that mean?

DR. STOCKMANN.

That I'll tell you afterwards, too. [Handing the card.] There, Petra; let smudgy-face run to the Badger's with this as fast as she can. Be quick!

[PETRA goes out through the hall with the card.]

DR. STOCKMANN.

Well, if I haven't had visits to-day from all the emissaries of the devil! But now I'll sharpen my pen against them: till it becomes a goad; I'll dip it in gall and venom; I'll hurl my inkstand straight at their skulls

MRS. STOCKMANN.

You forget we are going away, Thomas.

[PETRA returns.]

DR. STOCKMANN.

Well!

PETRA.

She has gone.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Good. Going away, do you say? No, I'll be damned if we do ; we stay where we are, Katrina!

PETRA.

Stay!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Here in the town?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, here ; the field of battle is here ; here the fight must be fought, here I will conquer! As soon as my trousers are mended, I shall go out into the town and look for a house ; we must have a roof over our heads for the winter.

HORSTER.

That you can have in my house.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Can I?

HORSTER.

Yes, there's no difficulty about that. I have room enough, and I'm hardly ever at home myself.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Oh, how kind of you, Captain Horster.

PETRA.

Thank you!

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Shaking his hand.] Thanks, thanks! So that is off my mind. And this very day I shall set to work in earnest. Oh, there's no end of work to be done here, Katrina! It's a good thing I shall have all my time at my disposal now; for you must know I've had notice from the Baths—

MRS. STOCKMANN.

[Sighing.] Oh yes, I was expecting that.

DR. STOCKMANN.

-----And now they want to take away my practice as well. But let them! The poor I shall keep anyhow—those that can't pay; and, good Lord! it's they that need me most. But by heaven! I'll make them listen to me; I'll preach to them in season and out of season, as the saying goes.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

My dear Thomas, I should have thought you had learnt what good preaching does.

DR. STOCKMANN.

You really are absurd, Katrina. Am I to let myself be beaten off the field by public opinion, and the compact majority, and all that sort of devilry? No, thank you! Besides, my point is so simple, so clear and straightforward. I only want to drive it into the heads of these curs that the Liberals are the craftiest foes free men have to face; that party-programmes wring the necks of all young and living truths; that considerations of expediency turn justice and morality up-side down, until life here becomes simply unlivable. Come, Captain Horster, don't you think I shall be able to make the people understand that?

HORSTER.

Maybe; I don't know much about these things myself.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Well, you see this is the way of it! It's the party leaders that must be exterminated. For a party-leader is just like a wolf, you see—like a ravening wolf; he must devour a certain number of smaller animals a year, if he's to exist at all. Just look at Hovstad and Aslaksen! How many small animals they polish off—or at least mangle and maim, so that they're fit for nothing else but to be house-owners and subscribers to the People's Messenger! [Sits on the edge of the table.] Just come here, Katrina see how bravely the sun shines to-day! And how the blessed fresh spring air blows in upon me!

• MRS. STOCKMANN.

Yes, if only we could live on sunshine and spring air, Thomas!

DR. STOCKMANN.

Well, you'll have to pinch and save to eke them out—and then we shall get on all right. That's what troubles me least. No, what does trouble me is that I don't see any man free enough and high-minded enough to dare to take up my work after me.

PETRA.

Oh, don't think about that, father; you have time enough before you.—Why, see, there are the boys already.

[EILIF and MORTEN enter from the sitting-room.]

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Have you a holiday to-day?

MORTEN.

No; but we had a fight with the other fellows in play time——

EILIF.

That's not true; it was the other fellows that fought us.

MORTEN.

Yes, and then Mr. Rorlund said we'd better stop at home for a few days

DR. STOCKMANN.

[Snapping his fingers and springing down from the table.] Now I have it! Now I have it, on my soul! You shall never set foot in school again!

THE BOYS.

Never go to school!

MRS. STOCKMANN.

Why, Thomas——

DR. STOCKMANN.

Never, I say! I shall teach you myself --that's to say, I won't teach you any mortal thing --

MORTEN.

Hurrah!

DR. STOCKMANN.

--but I shall help you to grow into free, high-minded men. --Look here, you'll have to help me, Petra.

PETRA.

Yes, father, you may be sure I will.

DR. STOCKMANN.

And we'll have our school in the room where they reviled me as an enemy of the people. But we must have more pupils. I must have at least a dozen boys to begin with.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

You'll never get them in this town.

• DR. STOCKMANN.

We shall see! [To the boys.] Don't you know any street urchins --any regular ragamuffins---?

MORTEN.

Yes, father, I know lots!

DR. STOCKMANN.

That's all right; bring me a few of them. I shall experiment with the street-curs for once in a way; there are sometimes excellent heads among them.

MORTEN.

But what are we to do when we've grown into free and high minded men?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Drive all the wolves out to the far west, boys!
[EILIF looks rather doubtful; MORTEN jumps about, shouting "Hurrah!"]

MRS. STOCKMANN.

If only the wolves don't drive you out, Thomas.

DR. STOCKMANN.

Are you quite mad, Katrina! Drive me out! Now that I am the strongest man in the town?

MRS. STOCKMANN.

The strongest—now?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, I venture to say this: that now I am one of the strongest men in the whole world.

MORTEN.

I say, what fun!

DR. STOCKMANN.

[In a subdued voice.] Hush! you mustn't speak about it yet; but I have made a great discovery.

MRS. STOCKMANN.

What, another?

DR. STOCKMANN.

Yes, of course! [Gathers them about him, and speaks confidentially.] This is what I have discovered, you see: the strongest man in the world is he who stands most alone.

MR. STOCKMANN.

[Shakes her head, smiling.] Ah, Thomas dear !

PETRA.

[Grasping his hands cheerily.] Father !

THE END.
